FOREWORD

About the general position of the Āgamaśāstra (also known as Gauḍapādiya-Kārikā(s) or Māṇḍūkya-Kārikā(s)) within the history of Indian philosophy, there can be little doubt. It is the earliest extant fairly systematic exposition of Vedāntavāda that shows a deep, decisive and palpable influence of Buddhism in its Mahāyāna form. Traces of Mahāyāna influence can also be detected in earlier Vedānta texts such as Bhartṛhari's Vākyapādiya and the Brahmasūtra—not to speak of later texts such as Paramārthasāra, Yogavāsiṣṭha and many others—but by no means to the same extent. The author of the GK, to be sure, does not want to be considered a bauddha himself, but the numerous echoes of, or even quotations from Mahāyāna sūtras and śāstras (some of the works of Nāgārjuna, Maitreya, Asaṅga and Vasubandhu above all) render this part of his background very clear. In the GK we find a māyāvāda, an ajātisamatāvāda, an advaitavāda which is as Buddhist as can be. One of the key-terms, ajātisamatā, can, just as the celebrated ghaṭākāśadrṣṭānta, be traced back to the Āryasatyadvayāvatārasūtra (see O. Quarnström, Hindu Philosophy in Buddhist Perspective, Lund 1989, p. 109). When, nevertheless, the author himself, as well as his ancient and modern followers staunchly deny such influence the reason for this untenable position has a sociological rather than a doctrinal basis. There is a good deal of odium theologicum, perhaps more than we can easily imagine, to be found in the ancient texts influenced by Buddhism.

Bhaṭṭācārya Vidhuśekhara's edition of the Āgamaśāstra deserves to be reprinted not just because it is the work that has done most to further the understanding of the GK in a historical and philological fashion, but also because it is still the only edition that comes close to what by modern standards can be considered a critical one. It cannot be said to have been superseded by Raghunath Damodar Karmakar's Gauḍapāda-Kārikā, Poona 1953 (reprinted 1973) which was published, as the editor says, because "Prof. Bhattacharya had allowed himself to be carried a little too far by his leanings towards Buddhism, and hence some of his interpretations appeared clearly to be biased and forced". Karmakar collated a few additional manuscripts, but none of them, he reported, "show any marked variations of reading".

Nevertheless, there are still many obscure points connected with the study of the GK. Is it the work of one author, or is it rather the work of a group of authors, a "school-work" of the Gauḍas and the Drāviḍas as Max Walleser suggested in 1910? And what about the text as we have it transmitted in 215 verses comprising four chapters? Are these chapters, as some Indian scholars contend, to be regarded as a unit? Or should we look upon them as four more or less independent essays, but by the same author, as Bhaṭṭācārya Vidhuśekhara opined? Or should we rather follow Vetter who, in a very important paper published 1978 in Wiener Zeitschrift für die Kunde Südasiens, raises the question of the original order of the chapters, and concludes, accepting one author, that for a proper understanding of the GK we must read the four chapters in the reverse order, i.e. IV, III, II, I? But who, then, changed the original order, and why? It goes without saying, that an opinion about these matters is essential for understanding the philosophy of our text as we have it today.

The question of the date of the GK is intimately related to the question of the relationship to Buddhism. The GK must, of course, have been composed later than Nāgārjuna, Aśaṅga and Vasubandhu to some of whose works it explicitly refers. Here, then, we have the terminus post quem. The terminus ante quem is provided by the quotations, or so it seems, in Bhavya's Vadānta-tattvaviniścaya (edited by Quarnström, ref. to above), and in Śāntaraksita's Madhyamakālaṃkāra. This would give us the date ca. 500 A.D. for GK. And yet the relationship between GK and Bhavya may be rather more complex than we would at first assume. Can we exclude the possibility of interpolations and revisions?

Related to these problems is also the question about the authenticity of the Āgamaśāstravivaraṇa, traditionally ascribed to the famous Śāṅkara. This attribution was accepted and supported by various arguments by scholars such as Vetter and Hacker. But, on the other hand, as I have pointed out (in Indo-Iranian Journal 1985), Śāṅkara more than once displays gross misunderstanding of GK. This fact may not affect the validity of the traditional attribution, but how is it compatible with the traditional account that Gauḍapāda was the paramaguru, or preceptor's preceptor, of Śāṅkara? In other words, Śāṅkara may well be separated from Gauḍapāda by more than one generation. That, again, has some bearing not only on the date of the GK but also on that of Śāṅkara. In any case, Śāṅkara's floruit must be later than Dharmakīrti (ca. 530-600, see Acta Orientalia 1980), who is quoted in the Upadeśasāhasrī, but also earlier than Maṇḍana-miśra (floruit ca. 700) who, in his Brahmasiddhi, almost certainly refers to Śāṅkara.

With regard to the date of the GK a good deal of confusion has been created by some curious pieces of information found in the Jagadgururatnamālāstava of Sadāśivabrahmendra. It claims (verse 10) that some foreign philosophers, viz. Apalūnya, Dāmiśa and others, were among the students of Gauḍapāda. No doubt this is intended to refer to Apollonius of Tyana, the Neopythagorean sage, born about the beginning of the Christian era, and Damis of Nineveh, both figures so well known from Philostratus' Life of Apollonius. But of the Sanskrit text of the Jagadguru-ratnamālāstava there is only a printed edition (no date, no place), no manuscripts, and, as my esteemed friend Dr. Kunjunni K. Raja informs me, not even the most credulous modern adherents of Śāṅkarācārya regard it as anything else than a modern forgery. So we can safely say that this tradition, which, if true, would upset our chronology totally, is simply apocryphal and without any value as a piece of historical evidence.

It is to be hoped that this reprint of a classical text on Indian philosophy will inspire scholars to take up further work in this most interesting and important field of human research. Once again the firm of Motilal Banarsidass deserves our credit for making a rare out-of-print work readily available to a wider audience.

CHRISTIAN LINDTNER

PREFACE

Introductory

It was in July, 1919, that, in order to prepare some lectures for my pupils in the Visvabharati, Santiniketan, I had to read the Upaniṣads anew; and in doing so when I, now with a little acquaintance with Buddhism, began to study the Āgamaśāstra of Gauḍapāda, popularly known as the Gauḍapāda-kārikā on the Māṇḍūkya Upaniṣad, I was struck with its contents which were known to me before this quite in a different light. I found there something new. In 1922, in the Second All-India Oriental Conference held in this University, which was presided over by my esteemed friend, Prof. Sylvain Lévi, then the first Visiting Professor of the Visvabharati, I read a paper on the subject, in which I said that a book under the title of The Āgamaśāstra of Gauḍapāda, embodying the result of my studies in it, would shortly be ready for the press. But, unfortunately, it could not be done earlier than now. However, I wrote some stray articles in English and Bengali on the subject. While they arrested the attention of certain scholars trained on modern lines, they gave rise to adverse criticism mainly from the orthodox section of my friends strictly following the indigenous interpretation of the Upaniṣad, given by Śāṅkara, the commentator of the present work.

Not being satisfied with the interpretation offered by Śāṅkara and his followers, or some other teachers I have attempted in the following pages to present to the readers my own interpretation of the work as I have understood. But in no way do I claim that my interpretation is the interpretation, i.e., the interpretation intended by Gauḍapāda himself. Gauḍapāda has not appeared to me and said that mine is the true interpretation, nor has God told me anything to the effect, nor am I an omniscient being. It is quite natural and well-known to all that the same thing sometimes appears differently to different persons owing to a variety of circumstances. It would be sheer foolishness on my part, I am perfectly conscious, if I pretend to claim by writing the following pages any superiority to the commentator, whether he is or is not identical with the great author of the commentary on the Brahmasūtras, who is known by the same name, Śāṅkara. I have simply put down my views here and I request my readers only to see if the text can be explained also in the way I have followed here.

yuktā ced grāhyeyaṃ na ced ato 'nyathā vidhātavyā |
na hi viṣame'rthe skhalituṃ na sambhaven mādṛśaṃ buddhiḥ ||

On points related to Buddhism, which are frequently raised in the course of my explanation, I have in many cases quoted in support of my views more passages than one, though a single passage could serve the purpose, having meant them specially for those of my readers who are not adequately acquainted with Buddhist thoughts or have no easy access to Buddhist works.

In the present volume I have given a new edition of the text of the Āgamaśāstra based on a number of MSS and different editions as described below, followed by an English translation. After this comes my annotation.

At the end there are Appendixes including the text and English translation of the Māṇḍūkya Upaniṣad, Variants of the MSS used for the edition of the text of the Āgamaśāstra, and different Indexes as the Contents will show.

Manuscripts

Let us give here a description of the MSS. referred to above :

1. A¹. Adyar Library. No. IX. G. 52. It is in folios 20-28 of the codex. Written in Devanāgarī on paper in black ink, punctuated with red marks, and bounded on either side by double lines. Size 12.3" × 4.8". Eleven lines on each page. No date, nor the name of the scribe. In this MS we have the MāU and the GK.

2. A². Adyar Library. No. IX. F. 99. Fols. 30-39 of this codex contain the MāU and GK. Size 10" × 6". Number of lines on each page 12 or 13. Written neatly in Devanāgarī on paper, punctuated and bounded on each side by a double line. No date, nor the name of the scribe.

3. A⁸. Adyar Library. No. IX. F. 130. Fols. 38-53 of this codex, too, contain MāU together with the GK. Written in modern Devanāgarī on paper, bounded on each side by a triple line. Size 10.1" × 5". There are 8 or 9 lines on each page. No date, nor the name of the scribe.

4. A¹. Adyar Library. No. IX. B. 181. It is written on hand-made paper in Śāradā script. There are 30 folios. Size 9" × 6". Each page has 18-25 lines. The borders of the MS are completely worn out, and last 12 folios are torn and destroyed in the middle. It is written in black ink, but the numbers of the folios are given in English figures in red one. No date is to be found, but from the worn out condition of the codex it seems to be not less than two hundred years old. The name of the scribe is also not given.

This codex contains different Upaniṣads, 19 in all, the Vedāntasāra (Śaivadarśana), and the Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, III. 10. 9-11. Here we have also the MāU and only the first prakaraṇa of GK.

5. B¹. Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute, Poona. No. 272 of 1879-80. It is written on paper in Devanāgarī. Size 10.5" × 4.7". Originally it had 67 fols., but the first 15 fols. are missing, and so we have now only 52 fols. Each page contains 10 to 14 lines. It is dated as 1765 (bāṇa-aṅga-aśva-avani), but it is not known whether it is Saṃvat or Śaka era.

This MS contains only the last three Books of the GK beginning with the first kārikā of Book II.

6. B². Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute, Poona. No. 778 of 1891-96. It is written on paper in Devanāgarī. Fols. 45. Size 9" × 5". Like the preceding one it, too, has only the last three Books of GK together with Śaṅkara's commentary.

The kārikās, specially those in the last Book are numbered very carelessly; thus the last kārikā of the last Book is numbered as 93 instead of 100. No date, nor the name of the scribe.

7. D¹. Dayananda Anglo-Vedic College, Lahore. No. nil. Written neatly in Devanāgarī on paper. Size 11.4" × 6". There is no date, nor the name of the scribe. It contains MāU and the GK together with the commentary of Śaṅkara on both of them. Originally there were 42 fols., but fols. 18, 19, 30-35 containing kārikās 10-53 of the fourth prakaraṇa are missing. In three or four cases some letters are lost, the paper being torn or damaged. In this MS b is written for both b and v.

8. D². Dayananda Anglo-Vedic College, Lahore. No. nil. Written neatly on paper measuring 11.2" × 5.6" and bounded on both sides by thick lines. There are 69 fols. It contains the MāU and the GK with Śaṅkara's commentary on both of them. No date, nor the name of the scribe.

9. D³. Dayananda Anglo-Vedic College, Lahore. No. nil. Fols. 2-35. Size 12.2" × 5.5". Written neatly on paper in Devanāgarī. It contains the first 7 passages of the MāU, first 14 kārikās of the first prakaraṇa of the GK and parts of Śaṅkara's commentary with Ānandagiri's ṭikā.

10. IO. India office. No. 2783. In this codex there are three MSS, viz., (1) Prapañcasāravivaraṇa, (2) Laghukāumudī, and (3) MāU together with the GK only up to the Book I. The śloka of maṅgalācaraṇa of Śaṅkara's commentary are given with GK. The script is Devanāgarī. No date, but it seems to be old. Almost correct.

11. K¹. Govt. Sanskrit College, Kāśī (Benares). No. 290 (Cover No. 9). Written in Bengali character on paper. Size 9.2" × 4.2". Fols. 24. Lines in each page 7. There is no date, yet it appears to be very modern. Writer's name is not given. There are mistakes and omissions. The MS contains both MāU and GK.

12. K². Govt. Sanskrit College, Kāśī (Benares). No. 163. This is a part of a bigger MS of which we have only 24 fols. (29-52). Size 12" × 5". Each page has 9 lines. There is no date, nor the name of the scribe. This MS contains only the third Book of the GK with Śaṅkara's commentary. It is not quite correct. Some of the kārīkās are here misplaced.

13. K³. Govt. Sanskrit College, Kāśī (Benares). No. 13 (Cover No. 4). Size 14.3" × 6.2". Script Devanāgarī. Fols. 10. Average number of lines in each page 13. Saṃvat 1907. Written at Vṛndāvana. The scribe is not mentioned.

It contains the original text of the MāU together with the commentary called Māṇḍūkyopaniṣadarthapraṇāśa. Though the name of its author is not mentioned here he is no other than Kūranārāyaṇa, a follower of the Rāmāṇuja school. This commentary is published in the Anandashram Series, No. 62.

14. K³. Govt. Sanskrit College, Kāśī (Benares). No. 304 (Cover No. 9). It is the first 12 fols. of a bigger codex. Size 10.3" × 5.4". Number of lines in each page 8. Written on paper in Bengali script. It extends up to the kārīkā 12 of Book I together with Śaṅkara's commentary. No date. Appearance modern. No name of the scribe.

15. PU¹. The Panjab University Library, Lahore. No. 948. Script Devanāgarī. Fols. 9. Size 12" × 6". Lines on each page 13-18. Date about 1850 V.S., as says one Bhoj Lal, a manuscript dealer and book-seller from whom it seems to have been secured.

It contains MāU up to prabhavāpyayau hi bhūtānām. atraite śloka bhavanti, and the GK of Book I.

16. PU². The Panjab University Library, Lahore. No. 746. Script Devanāgarī. Fols. 142. Size 14" × 7". Number of lines on each page varies from 13 to 18. No date, but said to be of about 1850 V.S. Obtained at Amritsar, and said to be of Kashmir recension. It contains the MāU and the GK together with the commentary of Śaṅkara followed by Ānandagiri's ṭīkā.

17. V². Visvabharati. No. 1317. It is written in Grantha character on palm-leaf. Fols. 58. Size 15.7" × 1.3". Lines 7-8 on each page. It contains the following works: (1) Śrīmad Bhagavadgītā (fols. 1-29), (2) Īśopaniṣad (fols. 30⁰), (3) Kenopaniṣad (fols. 30^b-32^a), (4) Kāthopaniṣad (fols. 32^b-37^a), (5) Praśnopaniṣad (fols. 37^a-41^a), (6) Muṇḍakopaniṣad (fols. 41^a-44^a), (7) Māṇḍūkyaopaniṣad with GK (fols. 44^a-52^a), and (8) Taittirīyopaniṣad (fols. 52^a-58). This MS seems to be about 150 years old, but there is no date nor the name of the scribe.

18. Vⁿ. Visvabharati. No. 1632. Written on palm-leaf in Devanāgarī. Fols. 13. Size 11.5"×4". Lines on each page 7-8. The scribe was one Vāsudeva Bhide, the son of one Nārāyaṇa. It was written at Śrīpañcavaṭi in the presence of (god) Śrīrāma on the 7th day of the black fortnight of the month of Caitra in the Śaka era 1733 (Prajāpati samvatsara)=1811 A.D. It contains the MāU with the GK beginning with the benedictory Vedic śloka, bhadraṃ karṇebhiḥ^o (RV, I. 89. 8), and svasti na indra^o (RV, I. 89. 6) to which are added the first two śloka, viz., prañānāṃśu^o and yo viśvātmā^o of Śāṅkara with which he is said to have begun his commentary on the MāU.

As regards the relationship of the MSS described above it may briefly be observed that A¹ and A² are from the same family and have close connexion with A³, IO, PU¹ and PU². B¹ and B² are closely related and so are D¹ and D². V^g and Vⁿ agree in many cases with A¹, A², D¹ and D².

Among the MSS mentioned above A¹ and A² are the worst giving very wrong readings. Yet, at least in one case (IV. 56^a) A¹ with IO gives the right reading. See Introduction, § 5. The Readings of the Text.

In addition to the MSS described above the readings collected from the thirteen MSS, utilized for the preparation of the second edition of the MāU and GK together with Śāṅkara's commentary and Ānanda-giri's sub-commentary in the Anandashram Series, No. 10, have also been consulted. The MSS collected for that edition are mentioned here, where necessary, according to the abbreviations used there, viz., K, Kh, G, Gh, etc. Besides, such editions as of Mahēśa-candra Pāla, Calcutta, 1806 Śaka era; of MM. Durgācaraṇa Sāṅkhya-Vedānta-tīrtha, Calcutta, 1331 Bengali era; and of Gita Press, Gorakhpur, 1993 V.S., have been consulted.

The most important readings are discussed in their respective places in the main work, while variants will be found in the Appendix II, pp. 229 ff. See Introduction, § 4.

Acknowledgment

I am deeply indebted to the authorities of the following Institutions, who have kindly given me on loan the MSS described above: Adyar Library, Madras; Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute, Poona; Dayananda Anglo-Vedic College, Lahore; Government Sanskrit College, Benares; India Office, London; Panjab University Library, Lahore; and Visvabharati Library, Santiniketan.

I am thankful to my pupils Śrī P. Anujan Achān, Government Archæologist, the State Museum, Trichur; Śrī A. Chalamayya, Superintendent, the Orphanage, Pithapuram; Śrī Anukul Chandra Banerjee, M.A., B.L., Assistant Lecturer in Pali, and Śrī Ajit Ranjan Bhattacharya, M.A., Ex-Puran-chand Nahar Fellow, both of the University of Calcutta; the first two kindly collated for me some of the MSS used in the present edition of the book, and the last two helped me in preparing two of the Indexes appended hereto. I am thankful also to Śrī Dinabandhu Ganguli, B.A., the able Superintendent, Calcutta University Press, for the kind care he has taken in carrying the book through the press, and to Śrī Ramakrishna Chakravarti, M.A., of the same press for his very careful assistance in reading the proofs.

I am grateful to my friends Prof. Umeshchandra Bhattacharya, M.A., and Pandit Narendrachandra Bhattacharya, Sāṃkhya-Mīmāṃsā-Vedāntatīrtha, M.A. of our University, for their kindly reading some of the proof-sheets. I also offer my sincere thanks to my esteemed friend, Professor Vanamali Chakravarti, Vedāntatīrtha, M.A., who has given me immense and invaluable help in various ways in my work. He has given me the benefit of discussing with him almost all the difficult points of the book, of reading proofs, and of giving various suggestions.

In conclusion I must express the deep sense of my gratitude to the authorities of the University of Calcutta, and specially to Dr. Syamaprasad Mookerjee, M.A., B.L., D.Litt., LL.D., Barrister-at-Law, M.L.A., President, Councils of Post-Graduate Teaching in Arts and Science, under whose benign and sympathetic patronage the book is included in the publications of the University.

INTRODUCTION

§ 1. The Māṇḍūkya Upaniṣad and its Extent

What work or works are we to understand by the name of MāU? And what is its real extent?

It is generally believed that the MāU comprises only the twelve prose passages beginning with “om ity etad akṣaram^o” and ending with “ātmanaḥ ya evaṃ veda” (see pp. 223-25).¹ It is also assumed that the kārīkās of Gauḍapāda are mere explanation of these passages. These two works are thus separate, though related to each other very closely as text and commentary.

But this is not admitted on all hands. Some hold that the Upaniṣad is composed not only of the twelve prose passages referred to above, but also of the kārīkās, twenty-nine in all, attributed to Gauḍapāda, as contained in Book I. Thus according to them those prose passages and the kārīkās in Book I are regarded as Upaniṣad or śruti.² This view seems to have partly ¹ Of these passages the first seven are found with slight variations in some cases also in NPTU, IV. 1-2; NUTU, II; and RUTU, 5.

² In 1925 I had an occasion to write (JHQ, Vol. I, pp. 119ff.) with regard to the present subject that this view was at least as old as Maḍhvācārya (1199-1274 A.D.), the great champion of the Dvaita school of the Vedānta philosophy. For, according to him and his followers, such as Vyāsa-tīrtha and Śrīnivāsa, both the prose passages and the kārīkās referred to are handed down by Varuṇa in the form of a maṇḍūkā ‘frog’ (see the commentary on the MāU by Maḍhvācārya with Śrībeen subscribed to by Śāṅkara, the commentator of MāU, who says in the introduction to his commentary nivāsiya, Kumbhakonam, pp. 2-3). In support of it Madhvācārya quotes the following two passages from the PP and HV respectively :

- (i) dhyāyan nārāyaṇaṁ devaṁ praṇavena samāhitaḥ |
maṇḍūkārūpi varuṇas tuṣṭāva harim avyayam ||
- (ii) iti maṇḍūkārūpi san dadarśa varuṇaḥ śrutim |

These lines are not found, so far as I know, in printed editions of the works.

Here Madhvācārya writes (ibid., p. 2) : maṇḍūkārūpiṇa varuṇena catūro nārāyaṇo 'tra stūyate. He regards the kārikās as mantras which are said to have been visioned by Brahman, the creator. On this he quotes the following couplet not yet traced in the same work (p. 8) :

brahmadīṣṭān ato mantrān pramāṇaṁ salileśvaraḥ |
atra śloka bhavanti cakāraivaṁ pṛthak pṛthak ||

Vyāsātīrtha's ṭīkā, too, introduces the kārikās under mantras.

The commentator of NPTU, who is known by the name of Śāṅkara-cārya and identical with the author of the Prapañcasūtra, a Tantiic work (see my paper, Śāṅkara's Commentaries on the Upaniṣads, in Sir Asutosh Mookerjee Silver Jubilee Volumes, Orientalia, 2, pp. 101 ff. and against it Raghuvāra Miṭṭhulāl Shastri : Proceedings and Transactions, Fifth Indian Oriental Conference, 1928, Vol. I, pp. 691 ff., as well as T. R. Chintamani : Proceedings and Transactions, Third Oriental Conference, Madras, 1924, pp. 419 ff.) is also of the same opinion, though he does not give particulars as to whether the ṛṣi 'seer' of the Upaniṣad is Varuṇa or whether the kārikās are seen by Brahman, the creator. Kūranārāyaṇa, another commentator of MāU belonging to the Rāmānuja school of the Vedānta maintains the same view taking the kārikās in Book I as mantras, which, in his opinion, too, together with the prose passages form the original Upaniṣad. Appayya Dīkṣita (a person different from the celebrated author of the Siddhāntaleśa) who is a commentator of the one hundred and eight Upaniṣads, seems to subscribe to the same view, for his commentary on the Upaniṣad extends only up to the prose passages and the kārikās of Book I. See the Catalogue of Sanskrit Manuscripts in the Adyar Library, Vol. I, Upaniṣads, pp. 116, 287-8.

After what I wrote as above in 1925, so far as my information goes, it was B. N. Krishnamurti Sarma who in 1931 took up the case in right earnest and advocated it very strongly. His first paper (New Light on the Gauḍapādakārikā) appeared in RPR, Vol. II, No. 1, pp. 35 ff. He wanted on it that the first of the four sections (prakaraṇa-catuṣṭaya) of the Āgamaśāstra begins with "om ity etad akṣaram"^o (MāU, 1), though the question as to whether that particular section or all the sections are regarded as śruti or not is not raised by him. Leaving aside what is said by this Śāṅkara whose identity with the great author of the commentary on the Brahmasūtras is doubtful,³ it appears plausible that the view under discussion dates back at least from the time of Rāmānuja (1055-1137 A.D.), as he seems to quote in his commentary on BS, I. 1. 1, a kārikā of Gauḍapāda (I. 16) as śruti.

mainly to show that Madhvācārya cannot rightly be accused of holding the view that the kārikās in Book I are regarded as śruti, and form a part of the original MāU. In doing so he tried to demonstrate that teachers "of the three schools of Vedānta, such as Śāṅkara, Ānandagiri, Madhusūdana, Brahmananda, Rāmānuja, Kūranārāyaṇa, Mahācārya, Madhva, Jayatīrtha, Vyāsācārya svāmin, Rāmācārya, etc.," are of the same opinion. In the same journal (RFR, 1932, Vol. III, No. 1; 1933, Vol. IV, No. 2) he wrote two papers more on the same subject. His writings gave rise to an interesting and long controversy in which took part some scholars, such as Y. Subrahmanya Sharma (RPR, 1933, Vol. IV, No. 3), and A. Venkata Subbiah (PO, 1936, Vol. I, Nos. 1-2), B. N. Krishnamurti's rejoinder being given in PO, 1936, Vol. I, No. 2, and 1937, Vol. II, No. 1. Besides, A. Venkata Subbiah wrote in IA, 1933, pp. 181 ff. an independent paper entitled The Māṇḍūkya-upaniṣad and Gauḍapāda which deserves to be mentioned in this connection.

³ Those who think that the two Śāṅkaras, the author of the Sārakabhāṣya on BS and the author of the commentary on ĀŚ, are one and the same should consider in the latter not only the question of maṅgalācāraṇa, the inferior quality of composition of the ślokas, the defect of metre (Ānandagiri's explanation can hardly be accepted), and the grammatical mistakes, but also the explanation offered of such kārikās as I. 10, II. 37, III. 25, and IV. 83 as to whether it is possible for the former. Cf. here his explanation of the words bhūta and abhūta in III. 23 with that in IV. 3; of sambhūti in III. 25 with that of IU, 12. See note 2.

He writes : jīvasyaiva hi nirodhaḥ śrūyate⁴ anādimāyayaḥ supto yadā jīvaḥ prabudhyata (I. 16) iti ca. By the word śrūyate evidently he regards the line as śruti.

B. N. Krishnamurti Sarma thinks that the above date is to be pushed back to the time of Sureśvara, the author of the BBV or even that of Śaṅkara, the author of the Śārirakabhāṣya on BS. But in spite of what he has said in support of the view one can hardly accept it when the statements made by the above two teachers themselves are taken into consideration. Sureśvara quotes ĀŚ, I. 11 (kāryakāraṇa⁵) in his NSi, IV. 41, and tells us (Op. cit., IV. 44) that it is said by the revered Gauḍas. The word Gauḍa here refers to Gauḍapāda. As regards Śaṅkara, he, too, quotes in his commentary on BS, II. 1. 9, a kārikā of Gauḍapāda (anādimāyaya⁶, I. 16), and says it is a saying of those teachers who know the tradition of the Vedānta,⁷ just as said by him in another case (BS, I. 4. 14) with regard to another kārikā of Gauḍapāda (mṛloha⁸, III. 15).⁶ Here Sureśvara and Śaṅkara say in the clearest possible language that the kārikās referred to above are by revered teachers. Hence, according to them, they are not śruti.

⁷ For detailed discussion of this question readers are referred to the scholars and their papers mentioned in note 2 of this section.

In the face of this clear statement, the passages from some works attributed to Śaṅkara, and as such of doubtful authority, which are quoted by B. N. Krishnamurti Sarma in order to support his view that the kārikās of the Book I are śruti, do not, as it appears to me, carry any particular weight.

Sureśvara's words, viz., vedāntokṛti with regard to GK, I. 14, and āgamaśāsana with regard to GK, I. 3, which are quoted by him for the same purpose from BBV, I. 4. 615 and 744 respectively, do not necessarily imply that the kārikās are śruti in the primary sense of the word, for the same author, Sureśvara, takes elsewhere, as we have already seen, one (I. 11) of the GK kārikās of Book I in which the above two kārikās are included, as a statement of Gauḍapāda. We should remember here that the above phrases are applicable also to works of human origin dealing with the Vedānta or Āgama.

That this controversy is not new, but an old one is known from the words of Rāmācārya, the author of the NAT, p. 223, where with regard to the two kārikās of Gauḍapāda, I. 17 and 18, he raises the question as to whether they are śruti, and arrives at the conclusion that they are really so.⁸

Thus we reach the conclusion that at least from the time of Rāmānuja, the author of the Śribhāṣya of ⁸ See RPR, 1933, Vol. IV, No. 2. It is interesting to note here that sometimes the kārikās of Book I of GK is referred to as Gauḍapādiyokṛtāśruti (LC, p. 580), and Māṇḍūkyaopaniṣadvivarāṇa Gauḍapādiyovārttika (NAT, p. 123b). The reader may think over here as to how these two words are used here loosely.

BS, there were some authoritative teachers according to whom the kārikās of Book I of the GK were regarded as śruti and as such they formed a part of the MāU.

Speaking generally our old teachers were śraddhādeva, 'trustful,' to use the word of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa (I. 1. 4. 15), with regard to the authenticity of our sacred or Sanskrit texts. Any work dealing with Upaniṣadic matter would readily be accepted by them as Upaniṣad.⁹ Remember the number of Upaniṣads and their language, subject matter and the way of treatment therein. Are they all Upaniṣads, though they are called so? The Bhagavadgītā is not an Upaniṣad in fact, yet, it bears the name. We all know its colophon in which occurs the following : iti śrīmadbhagavadgītāsu upaniṣatsu. And it is so only owing to the fact that it is like an Upaniṣad. The practice of taking what is actually not an Upaniṣad as an Upaniṣad appears to have been in existence from the time of Pāṇini, as says Satyavrata Sāmaśramin in his Trayīparicaya, Calcutta, 1893, p. 69. From his work (I. 4. 79)¹⁰ we may gather a word, upaniṣatkṛtya, which means 'having made like an Upaniṣad.' Does it not lead us to conclude as above? But grammarians differ here on the meaning of the word Upaniṣad, according to some it being tattvajñāna, the 'knowledge of reality,' while to others, rahasya, a 'secret' or 'secret doctrine'. Let us take here the case of Purāṇas. A Purāṇa is said to have 'five characteristics' (purāṇaṃ pañcalakṣaṇam). But there are Purāṇas which are, in fact, not so, though they are known to us under the same name. Similar is the case with regard to Upaniṣads and other works. It may be noted here in this connexion that it is not only the Book I of GK but also the remaining three Books of it which are sometimes held to be Upaniṣads, as Advaitapraṇāṇa Up., Alataśāntipraṇāṇa Up., etc.¹¹

We have seen above that according to some authorities including specially M a d h v ā c ā r y a only Book I of GK is śruti, and the last three books are not so, and as such they do not form any part of MāU, as does Book I. In other words, they form a separate work or works with which the former has no connexion. If it is not so, it will be very difficult to explain as to why the last three Books are not commented upon by those teachers. Why have they explained only the Book I? It cannot be said that these last three Books were not known to them or in their time, as their existence before them can very satisfactorily be proved by the very simple fact that the great Śaṅkara who flourished long before them has quoted in his commentary on BS, I. 4. 14, a kārikā (III. 15) from one of those three Books.

The fact that they did not comment upon the last three Books can be explained in two ways. First, it might have been their honest belief that those three Books had no connexion whatsoever with the MāU which, according to them, comprised only the twelve prose passages and the twenty-nine kārīkās of Book I of GK. Secondly, it might be said that they could not explain them, for the dominant thoughts therein, viz., Advaitavāda 'absolute monism' and Vijñānavāda 'idealism' would go against their own views, viz., Dvaitavāda 'dualism' or Viśiṣṭādvaitavāda 'qualified monism.' The first answer seems to be more reasonable than the second, for had they known that the last three Books, too, were really included in or connected with the original Upaniṣad they would have undoubtedly explained them, as is done¹² by Puruṣottama, the grandson of Vallabhācārya, the great teacher of the Suddhādvaita 'pure monism' school of the Vedānta.¹³

§ 2. The Relationship between the Prose Passages and the Kārīkās in Book I

As Madhvācārya says,¹ the twelve prose passages of the Upaniṣad are divided into four parts.²

¹² I have seen the commentary only on the first two Books as edited by Bhaṭṭa Rāmānātha Śāstrin and published from Puṣṭimārga-Kāryālaya, Bombay, Vikrama 1980. That Puruṣottama wrote or intended to write his commentary also on Book III (Advaita Prakaraṇa) is known from his own words (advaitākhye vicārayiṣye), p. 55. It seems that he commented or intended to do so also on the last Book.

² Part I, passages 1-6; Part II, passages 7; Part III, passages 8-11; and Part IV, passage 12.

Just after each of them there is a line: atraita ślokā bhavanti 'here are these ślokas.' These introductory lines when compared with similar sentences in different Upaniṣads³ will show that the ślokas are quoted there only to support what has been stated before. And we have already seen that Madhvācārya and others, specially the former, say the very thing quite clearly. Thus it follows from it that the ślokas or kārīkās were already in existence and the prose passages came into being afterwards.

This will be confirmed if we compare the contents of the prose passages with those of the corresponding kārīkās. The comparison will further show that it is the kārīkās on which the prose passages are based and not vice versa.

Supposing that the kārīkās are explanations of the Upaniṣad, i.e., of the twelve prose passages which are generally held to be so, one may naturally expect to see the difficult points in the latter explained in the former. And it also goes without saying that an exposition may add something new to what is said in the original, but it does not or should not omit the most important and difficult words or points in it. If these facts are borne in mind, it will be evident that it is the kārīkās that should be regarded as the earlier work, and not the prose passages.

According to the general view, kārikās 1-5 are to be taken as the exposition of the prose passages 3-5.⁴ Now the words saptāṅga 'with seven limbs,' and ekṣaṇaviṃśatimukha 'with nineteen mouths' in the passages 3 and 4 are the most difficult and they are explained differently by different commentators⁵; but not even the slightest mention of them is made in the kārikās. Why should the kārikās which are supposed to have been written in order to explain the text, i.e., the prose passages, omit these two important words?

Again, in the prose passages 3 and 9 we have the word vaiśvānara and not viśva, while in the kārikās (I. 1-4, 19, 23) there is only viśva and never vaiśvānara. Why is this discrepancy? A commentator is to explain what is actually found in the text, he is not allowed to take the liberty of changing it. Nor are the two words vaiśvānara and viśva identical or synonymous. It is difficult to account for this alteration. That it is owing to the exigency of metre is an absurd hypothesis.⁶

In this connexion, there are three words more, viz., jāgaritasthāna, svapna^o, and śuṣupta^o in the prose passages 3, 4 and 5 respectively. But they are entirely omitted in the kārikās. But why? It cannot be explained away by simply saying that they are not so important or difficult as to require any explanation; for, in order to understand the main thought of the passages the importance of these three stages, viz., wakefulness, dream, and deep sleep, can in no way be ignored.

⁵ See § here and on NPTU, IV; Madhva, KN, and P on the passages: Vidyāraṇya on NUTU, I; and Nārāyaṇa on RUTU, 3.

⁶ Note there is prajñānaghana in the prose passage 5, for which we have ghanaprajña in kārikā 1.

The fact is that the kārikās are older, and from them, as well as from some older Upaniṣads, the MāU, i.e., the prose passages to which that name is usually given is compiled or made,⁷ and in doing so some of the thoughts of these kārikās and of some older Upaniṣads are here in the prose passages simplified, modified or explained adding something new. Thus, it appears, in the present case, the author of the prose passages having found the word viśva in its special sense nowhere in the Upaniṣads⁸ seems to have substituted for it vaiśvānara which is used in such old Upaniṣads as ChU (V. 11. 12) and BU (V. 9. 1).⁹ Now the author of NUTU, I where the entire MāU is quoted with some slight variants,¹⁰ seeing both the words viśva in the kārikās and *vaiśvānara*¹¹ in the older Upaniṣads, has adopted both of them¹² and simplified the text to some extent.¹³ As to why these two terms are taken together in NUTU and what is

⁸ Excepting perhaps MU, VI. 7 which is not so old.

⁹ On the greatness of Vaiśvānara see RV, I. 59. 6; 98. 1; Nt, VII. 21-23; BS, I. 2. 32.

¹⁰ The MāU is almost entirely found also in NPTU, I.

¹² Sthūlabhuk caturātmā viśvo vaiśvānaraḥ prathamah pādaḥ.

their special significance is clearly shown by V i d y ā - r a ṇ y a in his ṭikā on it and in PD I. 28-29. See also VeS, § 17.

Similarly the three states, jāgarita, svapna, and suṣupta in the prose passages (3-4) are later additions from BU, or ChU, or both for a clear exposition of the terms bahispṛajña, antaḥpṛajña, and ghanapṛajña in kārikā 1.

That the MāU (i.e., the prose passages) has drawn upon the kārikās and some other Upaniṣads can be gathered from the comparison of both the texts. In the kārikās we have simply ghanapṛajña (1) and ānandabhuj (3) or ānanda (4), while the prose passage (5) reads as follows (see p. 224):

yatra supto na kañcana kāmam kāmāyate na kañcana svapnam paśyati (BU, IV. 3. 9) tat suṣuptam. suṣupta-sthāna ekibhūtaḥ¹⁴ pṛajñānaghana (BU, IV. 5. 13) evānandamayo (TU, II. 5. 1) hy ānandabhuk cetomukhaḥ pṛajñas tṛtiyaḥ pādaḥ.

Which of these two, the kārikā and the prose passage, is the original, and which is the exposition, may now easily be ascertained.

The word ghanapṛajña in the kārika is no doubt, identical with pṛajñānaghana in a somewhat different form, and to explain it the prose passage has introduced the word ekibhūta found, in fact, in the form of ekibhāvati in different Upaniṣads.¹⁵

¹⁴ Cf. ekibhāvati, BU, 6. IV. 4. 2 (seven times). See PU IV. 2 (twice); NPTU, IV. 1; NUTU, I.

¹⁵ See note 14.

The kārikā 1. 19 runs thus :

viśvasyātvavivakṣāyām ādisāmānyam utkaṭam |
mātrāsampratipattau syād āptisāmānyam eva ca ||

And the corresponding prose passage (9) is this :

jāgaritasthāno vaiśvānaro 'kāraḥ prathamā mātrāpter ādimattvād vā. āpnoti ha vai sarvān kāmān ādiś ca bhavati ya evaṃ veda.

It means that Vaiśvānara whose sphere is the waking state is the first mātrā 'measure,' the letter a, on account of obtaining (or pervasiveness) or on account of its being the first (āpter ādimattvād vā). One who knows thus obtains one's all desires and becomes first of all.

Now, if these two texts are compared it will at once be clear that the second is merely the exposition of the first with a tinge of the language used in the Brāhmaṇas.

Here is one point more. In the first text the reason is advanced as to why Viśva (=Vaiśvānara of the second text) is to be regarded as the letter a. And the reason is sāmānya 'similarity'—similarity between Viśva and the letter a. And this similarity is 'beginning' (ādi) or 'obtaining' or 'pervasiveness' (āpti). Now, according to the order of Viśva, Taijasa and Prājña, Viśva is at the beginning or first (ādi); just so is at the beginning or first the letter a of a, u and m of which Om is composed. Owing to this similarity Viśva is said to be identical with the letter a. The second similarity is āpti which by Ś a ṅ k a r a is thus explained: As Viśva pervades all the visible world, so does the letter a all the speech. On account of this similarity, too, Viśva is to be regarded as the letter a. The second text, however, gives a somewhat different explanation of this identity of Viśva and a. For, while the first text says that owing to both the similarities of ādi and āpti they are identical, the second text clearly says that it is owing to either of them (āpter ādimattvād vā).¹⁶ All these seem to be later developments.

The case is exactly the same with kārikās 1. 20, 21 and the corresponding prose passages 10 and 11 of the Upaniṣad, to which the reader is referred.

There is one thing more to be noted with regard to the kārikā 1. 21 and the corresponding prose passage 11 of the Upaniṣad. In the former one of the two similarities is māna 'measure' from $\sqrt{mā}$ 'to measure' while in the latter the word is not māna, but miti 'measure' from \sqrt{mi} . Similarly, while in the former we have apiti 'disappearance' from api- \sqrt{i} , in the latter there is laya 'disappearance.' There is, however, no difference of meaning, as shown, in the two cases. Yet, how far such divergency between an original text and its explanation in Sanskrit can be accounted for is to be considered seriously.

The conception of ātman as having four fourths or quarters (catuspād) is not so explicit in the words of *kārikās*¹⁷ as in those of the Upaniṣad, 2. This idea is, however, fully developed in the Upaniṣad 2 from the very beginning. This fact also goes to show the priority of the kārikās.

¹⁶ One may, however, say that the word vā in the text may be taken in the sense of ca or api. But Śaṅkara or Śaṅkarānanda does not say so.

The distinction between Turya or Turiya 'fourth' and the other three, viz., Viśva, Taijasa and Prājña, as made in the kārikās (I. 10-15), has nothing corresponding in the Upaniṣad, but the nature of Turya, which is expressed in a kārikā (I. 29) simply by two words, śiva 'blissful' and dvaita-upaśama 'cessation of duality' is thus elaborated in two passages, 7 and 12, of the Upaniṣad :

(i) nāntahprajñam na bahiṣprajñam nobhayataḥ-prajñam na prajñānaghanam na prajñam nāprajñam adīṣṭam avyavahāryam agrāhyam alakṣaṇam acintyam avyapadeśyam ekātmapratyayasāram prapañcopaśamaṁ śāntam śivam advaitam caturtham manyante. sa ātmā sa vijñeyah.

(ii) amātraś caturtho 'vyavahāryaḥ prapañcopaśamaḥ śivo 'dvaita evam onkāra ātmaiva. samviśaty ātmanātmānam¹⁸ ya evaṁ veda.

These two passages are mere amplification or exposition of what is briefly said in the kārikā, I. 29, and consequently appear to be later developments, as shows also the language used here.

Again, it is to be noted that though in the Upaniṣad (1) Brahman or Ātman is said to have four quarters (catuspād) which are explained there later on (3-6), there is no express mention of them in the kārikās which are supposed to be an explanatory work.

¹⁸ See VS, XXXII. 11 : ātmanātmānam abhiṣamviveśa.

Compare the kārikā I. 24 with the prose passage 8 of the Upaniṣad and it will be found that the former is explained in the latter in some detail and not vice versa.

The kārikā (I. 6) opening the discussion about the origin (prabhava) of all things may be connected with the last part of the passage 6 of the Upaniṣad: prabhavāpyayau hi bhūtānām.¹⁹ Here prabhava is described in the kārikās I. 6-9 at some length, but apyaya 'disappearance' is not even touched in the kārikās. This would hardly be possible if the kārikās were meant to explain the Upaniṣad.

All these considerations lead me to conclude as follows :

(i) The kārikās in Book I are not the exposition (vyākhyāna) of the MāU.

(ii) The MāU is mainly based on the kārikās,²⁰ and not vice versa.

(iii) And as such the MāU is later than the kārikās.²¹

Here we must remember what M a d h v ā c ā r y a has said on the point. Serious charges may be and have been brought against him saying "that he is addicted to the fabrication of evidence and that he very frequently cites passages from books which do not and did not at any time exist."²² Or Appayya Dikṣita in his Madhvamataavidhvamsana may give a list of such books, or may say of him :

¹⁹ It is taken from KU, II. 2.

²⁰ It has drawn much also upon some older Upaniṣads as will be seen from the text printed herewith, pp. 223 ff.

²¹ See M a x W a l l e s e r: Der älter Vedānta, p. 5. He says that the kārikās do not show that the Upaniṣad was before them.

tathāpy ānandatirthiyaṃ matam agrāhyam eva naḥ |
yatra vaidikamaryādā bhūyasy ākulatāṃ gatā ||²³

Or, again, most of the authorities cited by him in his commentary on the MāU may not be traced; or one may or may not attach any value to the myth he has given us that Varuṇa having assumed the form of a frog received the mantras, i.e., the kārikās originally visioned by Brahman, the creator; yet, in the present case, we have to accept, as we have shown above, his view that the mantras or kārikās are older and on them is based our MāU.²⁴

§ 3. The Inter-relationship of the Four Books of the Āgamaśāstra

It is generally held that the Āgamaśāstra has four prakaraṇas or Books, viz., Āgamapraṇāṇa, Vaitathya^o, Advaita^o, and Alātāśānti^o. Here arise the following questions: Are these Books, in fact, four parts of the same work, or are they four independent treatises compiled in one volume? Again, is it that while one or more of the Books form a work, the remaining one or ones constitute another work?

²² A . V e n k a t a s u b b i a h: IA, 1933, p. 189.

²³ See RPR, Vol. II, p. 51.

Śaṅkara, the commentator, with his followers, holds that the four Books are the different parts of the same work entitled Āgamaśāstra. And so, in order to show their mutual connexion first with reference to Books I and II, he writes just at the beginning of his commentary on Book II: “‘When (the Reality) is known there is no duality’—This is already said (I. 18d),¹ and it is supported by such śrutis as ‘There is only one without a second (ChāU, VI. 2. 1).’ This is, however, only a statement of scripture (āgamamātra). With a view to showing that the unreality of duality can be established also by reasoning (upapatti) Book II is begun with the words ‘vaitathyam,’ etc.”

Now, as regards the relationship between Books II and III Ś observes (III. 1): “The determination of ¹ Ś could easily refer here also to I. 16, 17 and 29. Moreover, in the manner which he has adopted in showing the relationship between the first two Books the following might also be added in his favour, as in his opinion the Āgamapraśaṅga begins with “Om ity etad akṣaram ity ādi,” in other words, it includes the MāU. We read in the concluding kārikā (29) of Book I: dvaitasyopāśamaḥ śivāḥ, which is in fact the same as prapañcopāśamaḥ śāntaḥ śivāḥ and prapañcopāśamo ’dvaitaḥ of the MāU, 7 and 12 respectively. This very thing is re-assured in Book II. 35 by a phrase which is exactly the same in sense as the above, i.e., prapañcopāśamo ’dvaitaḥ. Again, in I. 10 we have advaitaḥ sarvabhāvānām, and the same thing in one or other form is seen in many places in Book II: tasmād advayatā śivā (II. 33); advaitaḥ yojayet smṛtim (II. 36), advaitaḥ samanuprāpya (II. 36). Cf. here also advaitaḥ paramārtho hi (III. 18). And this truth is established there (II. 1 ff.) by strong reasons showing the unreality (vaitathya) of all things as in dream. Thus does it not show that these two Books are closely connected with each other?

Om is made only by a proposition (pratijñāmātra): ‘The Ātman is the cessation of expression, blissful and without a second, (MāU, 12).’ It is also said that ‘When (the Reality) is known there is no duality’ (I. 29). There in the Book called Non-reality (vaitathya), i.e., II, the absence of duality is set forth by the illustrations of dream, magic, castle-in-air, etc. (II. 31), by reasons such as the ‘capability of being seen’ (dṛśyatva)² and ‘the state of having the beginning and the end’ (ādyantavattva),³ and also by reasoning (tarka). Now, it is asked: Is it that non-duality can be understood only by scripture or also by reasoning?⁴ The reply is: It can be done also by reasoning. How is it? For this Book III is begun.”

Finally with reference to Book IV, Ś says in introducing it: “Through the determination of Om non-duality is proposed (pratijñāta). It is then established (siddha) by showing the non-reality of the different external objects (in Book II). Again, in Book III it is directly ascertained by scripture (āgama) and reasoning concluding that it is the highest truth (III. 48). At the end⁵ it is hinted that the Dvaitins ‘Dualists’ and Vaināśikas ‘Nihilists’ are opposed to this view of non-duality which is the meaning of the scripture (āgama), and their views are wrong views as they cause such evil passions as attachment and aversion, on ² Where is it in Book II?

³ II. 7.

⁴ advaitaḥ kim āgamamātreṇa pratipattavyam āhosvit tarkeṇāpi.

account of their mutual contradiction. As there is no place of evil passions in it, the view of non-duality is the right view, and as such it is praised. Now, here (in Book IV) having shown in details that their views are not right being mutually contradictory they are to be thrown away, and by doing so the establishment of the view of non-duality is to be concluded by the method of inference called *avīta*⁶ 'negative.' For this, (the Book called) 'The Cessation of the Fire-brand' is begun."

Let us now examine the above statement of Ś. By his observation regarding the connexion between Books I and II, he wants to mean that though it is said in Book I that there is no duality, yet, it is merely an expression of āgama, no reason being offered there in its favour. And so in order to support it by reasons Book II is written. But is it really so? Is it that there is no reasoning at all in Book I? None can give the answer in the affirmative. Certainly various reasons are advanced in Book II, but it cannot be said that Book I is altogether conspicuous by their absence. For, they are to be clearly found in kārikās 16-18, though not to that extent as in Book II. Here arises a question: If the connexion between Books I and II is really as it is shown by Ś to be, then why is it that the author of Book II himself does not say so just at its beginning, though he could do so easily? But instead of doing this he begins it without any reference to Book I, only alluding to the opinion of the wise that all things in dream are unreal. He could also write here that the determination of Om is through the realization of non-duality which depends on the unreality of external things, which is dealt with in Book II. But he has not done so.

Let us consider here another point. We have already seen that in accordance with some teachers such as Mādhvācārya, the MāU is composed of the twelve prose passages and the twenty-nine karikas in Book I. It is quite clear from it that, in their opinion, the work is a complete one having no connexion with any of the remaining three Books of the ĀŚ. This view seems to be confirmed by the fact that its subject matter, i.e., the determination of Om, is here dealt with completely, as one can easily understand from the last two kārikās of Book I, after reading which one does not feel that anything more remains to be further discussed and elucidated; and, in fact, we see nothing directly of Om in the following Book or Books. Thus it follows that the treatise consisting of the kārikas of Book I has no relationship to any of the Books that follow. It is also to be noted here that the views of the teachers referred to above cannot be ignored altogether.

Further, if Book II is a continuation of Book I, it could be expected that the former should somehow or other presuppose the latter. But does it do so? If so, where? Moreover, what does one lose if one takes Book II as an independent work on the advaita Vedānta? Does one find in reading this Book in that light anything improper, non-sensical or unintelligible without assuming its connexion with Book I? Or does one really feel that without Book I it appears to be incomplete?⁷ That it is complete in itself will be clear if we attentively read at least the concluding portion of it, i.e., kārikās 35-38.

Now with regard to the connexion between Books II and III let us remember what Ś says. His words, put briefly, would amount to this that non-duality can be understood not only by āgama, but by reasoning (tarka) as well. Consequently to exhibit the reasoning Book III is required. If that is so, we shall have to accept that according to Ś the object of both the Books II and III is one and the same, i.e., giving the arguments for non-duality. In that case, why should there be two separate Books instead of one in which all could be included? This leads one to think of a different object for which Book III must have been written. And what this object was will be clear if one examines the contents with some amount of care. Here at the beginning (III. 1-2) the author tells us about 'non-origination' (ajāti) and having established it concludes in the end (III. 48) that it is the highest truth (uttama satya). In doing so he discusses the Vedānta, and in that connexion the absence of difference between Jiva and Brahman. He treats also of a samādhi 'intense abstract concentration' called asparśayoga meant for the realization of the Truth.

It is not that there is no mention of non-duality in this ⁷ These questions with necessary modifications here and there should be put in discussing the relationship also of the following Books.

Book. It is there (III. 18),⁸ but only incidentally, and as such is not discussed. But can one say rightly that because of the mention of non-duality in this Book, Books II and III must have some direct connexion between them? If so, is it not that there will be no difficulty whatsoever in finding out a relationship between any two works on the same subject? But that relationship will certainly not be as that between the different chapters of the same work. It is to be noted that Ś himself has not suggested such relationship. Thus it appears to me that there is nothing against one's thinking that Book III, too, is an independent work on advaita Vedānta.

We now come to Book IV. It has already been seen how Ś wants to connect it with the preceding Books. He assumes that the views of Dvaitins and Vaināśikas⁹ are to be shown in details¹⁰ in this Book as wrong, and by doing so the conclusion is to be established that the theory of non-duality is right. First, we are to examine here as to how far this assertion can be accepted. Let us take for granted that, as he says, owing to their mutual contradiction the views of the Dvaitins and the Vaināśikas are wrong and this is to be shown in detail in this Book. But where and how much is it done? Dvaitins are referred to by the word vādins 'disputants' only in two places (IV. 3 and 6); but even there in the first place, though only their mutual contradiction is simply referred to, no detail of it is to be found. There is no allusion to Vaināśikas in this Book. But if by that word the Buddhists are meant, no mutual contradiction with the Dvaitins, (or among themselves,) is to be found of their views. On the contrary, the author of the ĀŚ has accepted or approved of them throughout the Book as the present writer has attempted to show. How is it then that in accordance with Ś, one can expect to understand from this Book that the views of the Dvaitins and the Vaināśikas are wrong and the view of non-duality is right? Thus one can hardly connect in this way the present Book with the preceding one or ones. We should also remember here the questions that have already been put in discussing the relationship between Books I and II. See p. lii.

⁸ Book III. 18: advaitam paramārtho hi. See Book I. 17: advaitam paramārthataḥ.

⁹ See III. 17.

¹⁰ Com. on IV. 1: tad iha vistareṇa anyonyaviruddhatayā asamyagdarśanatvaṃ pradarśya, tatpratīṣedhenādvaitadarśanasiddhir upasamhartavyā.

Is there then no relationship of any kind between Books IV and others? How can it be so? Certainly there is a relationship and it is rather a close one, as the following lines will show. A careful reader will see that a large number of expressions in various forms in the first three Books are literally quoted or alluded to in Book IV. And it will be noticed that some matters dealt with in the former are done so again in the latter. For instance, I. 16^c=III. 36^a=IV. 81^a; II. 6-7=IV. 31-32¹¹; (cf. II. 1, 4 with IV. 33, and II. 2 with IV. 34¹²); III. 20-22=IV. 6-8¹³; III. 29-30

¹¹ See III. 2, 48; IV. 4, 5.

¹² The second half is, however, identical.

=IV. 61-62¹⁴; III. 48=IV. 71. Besides, such expressions or topics as the following are to be found in more than one Book: jñeyābhinna jñāna 'the knowledge is not different from the knowable' is in III. 33 and IV. 1; ajātivāda 'the theory of non-origination' in III. 2 ff and IV. 3 ff. Such being the case it must be accepted that Book IV is rather closely related to other Books.

But this relationship is not such as between a work and its different chapters on the following grounds:

With reference to later Sanskrit works it is a well-known practice that their commencement is with a maṅgalācaraṇa 'prayer for success' which includes a namaskāra 'paying homage' to one for whom the authors have regard. Now, as we have at the very beginning of Book IV a kārikā embodying maṅgalācaraṇa, it naturally induces one to think that it is not a chapter of any work, but itself an independent work.

It is, however, true that maṅgalācaraṇa is found not only at the commencement of a work, but also in other places of it, as in the case of the Nyāyakaṇḍali of Śrīdhara on the Praśastapādabhāṣya, or of the Sanjivani of Mallinātha on the Raghuvamśa. But it is to be noted here that in such cases it is done in each of the chapters, and not in any particular one, whereas in the present case, here in ĀŚ we have it only in Book IV, so far as the extant editions and the MSS that are examined can show.¹⁵ Here we may remember a Buddhist work, viz., the Pañjikā of Praññākaramati on the Bodhicaryāvatāra. It consists of nine chapters. Here the maṅgalācaraṇa is only in the first¹⁶ and the last chapters, and not in others. Evidently the maṅgalācaraṇa at the beginning of its chapter IX does not mean to say that it is an independent work. Considering the contents of this chapter of both the Bodhicaryāvatāra and its Pañjikā, which deal with prajñāpāramitā, it appears to me that the only thing that can be said is this that the maṅgalācaraṇa of the Pañjikā simply suggests a special importance of both the works, the Pañjikā and the BA. Thus the maṅgalācaraṇa of Book IV cannot conclusively show that it is an independent work and not the continuation of the preceding ones. But here is a thing which should not be left unnoticed. Both at the beginning and at the end of Book IV there is a maṅgalācaraṇa in the form of namaskāra 'paying homage.' Does it not imply that the Book is an independent work and complete in itself?

Let us discuss here another point. We have already seen that a number of kārikās in Books II and III

¹⁵ We have some ground to think that at the beginning of Book I a few kārikās are now missing. It is not improbable that there was a maṅgalācaraṇa in those kārikās.

are repeated in Book IV. Why is this repetition? Moreover, certain things treated of before are discussed again in Book IV; e.g., ajātivāda 'theory of non-origination' discussed in III is discussed again in IV. But why? A point discussed and settled once in a chapter may, if necessary, be alluded to in a subsequent chapter, but why should it be discussed and settled again? Is it not useless? Why should the author of Book IV indulge in such a useless action? This leads one to think that Book IV is an independent work in which the author has incorporated certain things that are already dealt with by him elsewhere, while others are discussed again more elaborately or in a different way. The discussion of the ajātivāda is an instance on the point.

Thus we arrive at the conclusion that these four Books are four independent treatises and are put together in a volume under the title of the Āgamaśāstra.

§ 4. The Text of the Āgamaśāstra

We are now to discuss a few points regarding the text of the ĀŚ, as we have now in the extant editions and the MSS examined for them. Here arises a question: Is it that the text is a complete one? It seems to me that the answer cannot be given in the affirmative. It will at once occur to the mind of a reader that the first kārikā of Book I has found its place there quite abruptly. Without any reference to the three states, waking, dreaming and deep sleep as described in the prose passages of the MāU this kārīkā is not intelligible.¹ It appears therefore that one or more kārīkā's here are missing.²

It may be said that as in Book IV,³ so here, too, at the beginning of Book I, a maṅgalācaraṇa is expected, but it is not found. Hence it appears that originally at least one kārīkā was composed here for it, but subsequently somehow or other it was lost. This point of maṅgalācaraṇa cannot, however, be much insisted upon. For, in the time of the author of the ĀŚ this practice of maṅgalācaraṇa was not so much persisted in as in later days. The great Śāṅkara, the author of the Śāriraka-bhāṣya, does not follow it, so far as his undisputed works are concerned.⁴ So it may be that the author did not like it at the beginning of Book I, though he actually followed it in Book IV. Thus this point is not of much importance.

Let one read kārīkā's 5 and 6 and say if there is any connexion between them. Kārīkā 6 seems to have come here all of a sudden. The commentator Ś is silent here on their mutual connexion. Does this not lead one ¹ This fact should not, however, be taken as a reason for supposing the priority of the MāU to the kārīkā's refuted elsewhere on strong grounds.

² According to also those who hold that the kārīkā's of G a u ḍ a p ā d a are written as an explanation (vyākhyāna) of the MāU, one might naturally expect at the beginning some words to that effect, but they are not found. In accordance with this theory also at least one kārīkā is lost here.

⁴ It is disputed that the beginning śloka's of the commentary on the TU, which go by his name are actually written by him to think that a kārīkā or kārīkā's are missing here? They might have been in existence in the time of the commentator, and possibly they were commented upon by him, but all this was lost afterwards.

Undoubtedly Om is one of the subject matters of Book I which consists of 29 kārīkā's, but until kārīkā 19 there is no mention whatsoever of the word. This does not seem to be quite proper. And here is one thing more to be borne in mind; it is this that without a knowledge of the fact that Om can be analysed into a, u, and m this kārīkā (19) can hardly be understood, so one expects here something like the prose passage 8 of the MāU.

With reference to some of the kārīkā's it appears to me that their original order has been somehow or other changed, so that their proper elucidation has been difficult. Let us take kārīkā II. 33. I am afraid, it does not fit well here after kārīkā II. 32. Its right place seems to be after II. 30. Similarly in Book IV kārīkā's 38, 39, 40 and 41 appear to be 40, 38, 41 and 39 respectively, as is discussed in a foot-note on p. 146.

As regards IV. 77, it seems to me that between its two lines at least two more lines are lost, as will be seen from the discussion on p. 184, to which the reader is referred.

This consideration coupled with that of the variants that are supported by Ś in his commentary, as I have discussed in their places, shows that the original text of the ĀŚ of G a u ḍ a p ā d a underwent some serious changes at least by the time of Ś, if not earlier.

§ 5. Readings of the Text

We may now speak here a few words with regard to the readings of the ĀŚ. The collation¹ of the MSS referred to above as well as of the different editions of the work has resulted in showing or suggesting true or better readings in many cases, which have mainly been discussed under the kārikās concerned, giving the grounds for the readings adopted. There are, however, other cases where I have not offered my reasons for selecting a particular reading, as they can easily be understood by the reader himself. Below will be found, for example, some notable readings that are chosen or suggested :

1. dve tu (I. 11^d) for dvau tu.
2. saṃvṛtatvaṃ na (II. 4^d) for saṃvṛtatvena.
3. 'pi pratipadyate (II. 7^d) for vipratipadyate. See IV. 32^b.
4. 'vyavasthitān (II. 13^b) for vyavasthitān.
5. nānyabhāvena (II. 34^a) for nātmabhāvena.
6. sa-yathā (III. 11^d) for khaṃ yathā.
7. yad a° (IV. 12^a) for yady a°. As we have yadi in ^b, it cannot again be expected in a; nor can it, in that case, be construed properly. Besides, the reading yad a° is actually found in V^g.

8. 'nādiḥ (IV. 23^a) for 'nādeḥ, and jātir^(d) supported by PU¹ for hy ādir.

9. saṃsāro nopalabhyate (IV. 56^d) supported by A¹ and IO for saṃsāraṃ na prapadyate.

10. svabhāvena (IV. 57^a) for sadbhāvena.
11. saṃvṛtyā (IV. 58^b) supported by Vⁿ and Ś for jāyante.
12. paratanthro 'bhi° (IV. 73^c) for paratantrābhi°.
13. paratanthro 'bhi° (IV. 74^c) for paratantrābhi°.
14. dharmadhātūḥ svabhāvataḥ (IV. 81^d) for dharmo dhātusva°.

§ 6. The Name of the Work

The present work popularly known as Māṇḍūkya-kārikā (or ^o*kārikās*) or Gauḍapāda-kārikā (or ^o*kārikās*) is traditionally called Āgamaśāstra. It is owing to this fact that the commentary on it by Ś is called Āgamaśāstra-vivaraṇa.¹ Sometimes it is named also Āgamagrantha or Upadeśagrantha as some of the colophons show (p. 244), occasionally both of these names are used together (loc. cit.). It is also called or described as Māṇḍūkyavārttika,² or Māṇḍūkyopaniṣad-gauḍapādayākhyāna, or Gauḍapādiyakārikā, or simply Gauḍapādiya after its author, as is shown by some MSS. Again, sometimes it is referred to as Māṇḍūkyasākhā.³

² The word vārttika is not properly used here, as the present work has not the characteristics of a vārttika, for a vārttika is said to be a work which criticizes what is said, what is not said, and what is said wrongly in the original work, as says Rājaśekhara in his Kāvyamīmāṃsā, GOS, No. I, 1916, II. p. 5: uktānuktaduruktacintā vārttikam.

māyāmātram idaṃ dvaitam advaitam paramārthataḥ |

iti māṇḍūkyasākhayām śrutivākyam udāhṛtam ||

Here I. 17 of our text is referred to. For other two namas see § 1, note 8, p. xxxv.

It may be noticed here that two MSS, D¹ and D², describe the work as Vedāntamūla 'origin of the Vedānta' which is very significant.

Now let us discuss as to why this book is called Āgamaśāstra. The word āgama among other things means 'a traditional doctrine' or 'anything handed down and fixed by tradition'; and śāstra gives the sense in such cases as the present one, of 'a religious or authoritative treatise.'⁴ Thus the compound word, Āgamaśāstra, means a śāstra pertaining to āgamā, i.e., authoritative treatise which deals with or is based on a traditional doctrine or doctrines. That the Āgamaśāstra is in fact of such character is fully borne out throughout the book itself, as the following few lines will show.

Besides the general meaning 'to remember' the root √smṛ figuratively means also 'to hand down memoriter, declare,' and so its past participial form smṛta is used in the sense of 'handed down memoriter, or declared, mentioned,' etc. Thus the sentence śāstre smṛtam means 'it is handed down memoriter or declared in a scripture.' And though the subject of the sentence is not expressed in this or similar cases, it is easily understood, it being a teacher or teachers or a similar person or

For āgama see MV, pp. 268-9. For the Buddhist interpretation of the word śāstra one may be referred to MVST, p. 4 from which the following is quoted here:

yac chāsti ca kleśaripūn aśeṣān santrāyate durgatito bhayāc ca |
tac chāsanāt trāṇaguṇāc ca śāstram^o ||

It is quoted also in MV, p. 3. For a description of śāstras see Rājasekhara, Op. cit., II. For the significance and importance of the word śāstra (Tibetan bstan.bcos, Chinese lun) mark its use in Nāgārjuna's fundamental work, Madhyamakāśāstra.

persons who may or may not have been mentioned before. Now with regard to our case the word smṛta is employed by our author not less than eleven times.⁵ This fact clearly shows that our author refers to or deals with some doctrine or doctrines handed down traditionally. This is clear also from his employment of the following phrases in the work:

1. satām iti viniścayaḥ (I. 6); 2. svapna āhur maṇi-ṣiṇaḥ (II. 2); 3. svapna āhuḥ prakāśitam (II. 3); 4. evam āhur maṇiṣiṇaḥ (II. 5); 5. dṛṣṭam vedānteṣu vicakṣaṇaiḥ
(II. 31); 6. iti tattvavido viduḥ (II. 34); 7. °munibhir

§ 7. The Author

We have already seen,¹ as the great Śaṅkara says in his commentary on the BS, I. 4. 14 and II. 1. 9, that the work was by an Ācārya 'teacher' to whom the tradition of the Vedānta was known. But the question is: who is that Ācārya? That he is Gauḍa-pāda² is well-known traditionally and found in the colophons of each of the four Books in MSS of the original and its commentary. He is sometimes called Gauḍapādācārya,³ Gauḍācārya,⁴ or simply Gauḍa.⁵ From this we may think that his real name is Gauḍa, the words -pāda, -pada, -caraṇa, or -ācārya being added to it simply as honorific.⁶ That his actual name is Gauḍa is stated very clearly by Bālākṛṣṇānanda Sarasvatī (middle of the 17th century A.D.) in his SMV, p. 6, ll. 9-12.

Now the question arises: Is the word Gauḍa his personal name or does it simply signify that he belongs to a country called Gauḍa? In Sureśvara's NSi, IV. 44, there are two words, Gauḍas and Drāviḍas, which refer to Gauḍapādācārya, the author of the present work and the great Śaṅkarācārya, the author of the Upadeśasāhasrī, respectively, according ² Sometimes we have Gauḍapada (JM, 10) and Gauḍacaraṇa (SMV, p. 5, l. 23), most probably for metrical exigency.

³ Ś on ŚU, I. 8 (p. 30).

⁴ PD, II. 23; Śāyaṇa on TA, VII. 2 (p. 565).

⁵ NSi, IV. 44.

⁶ A Venkatasubbiah (IA, 1933, p. 193) is of the same opinion.

to the commentator, Jñānottama.⁸ It may be said that as Śaṅkara is referred to by a name related to his native country, Drāviḍa (i.e., Kerala, the modern Malabar), and not by a personal name, so the case must have been the same with Gauḍapāda; in other words, he, too, must have been alluded to by a name connected with his country which is Gauḍa. Otherwise, why should Sureśvara mention him in a different way?

Wallerer (op. cit., p. 3) is of opinion that by the two words of Sureśvara, Gauḍas and Drāviḍas, we are to understand two Vedantic schools. If we are to know by the word Drāviḍas a school founded by Śaṅkara in Malabar (the representative work of which is here said to be the Upadeśasāhasrī), we must take also the Gauḍas as a native school established in North India in the land of Gauḍas,⁹ which might have already been much advanced in culture. It is, however, immaterial, to my mind, to discuss as to whether the words actually refer to the two ⁸ It may be noticed here that in the second edition (Bombay Sanskrit Series, No. XXXVIII, 1906) of the NSi occurs the following line in Jñānottama's commentary on IV. 44: kevalānām api drāviḍatva-prasiddheḥ. Seeing this the editor, Colonel G. A. Jacob writes in his notes (p. 247): "Who are the kevalas referred to in the commentary?" The fact is that the word kevala is wrongly written, or read, or printed for Kerala, the ancient name of the country. The same mistake occurs also in the revised edition (1926) of the book, p. 193.

⁹ Wallerer thinks that the country might have been so named owing to much cultivation of sugar-cane (guḍa). Cf. the word punḍra for North Bengal, which also means 'sugar-cane' (of red variety).

representative teachers or to the two schools represented by them, both the interpretations being equally possible.

It may be pointed out here that merely the word Gauḍa cannot invariably refer to one who is an inhabitant of the Gauḍadeśa. One may not actually be an inhabitant of it, yet, may be regarded as a Gauḍa. Abhinanda, the author of the Yogavāsiṣṭhasāra or Laghuyogavāsiṣṭha, though a Kashmirian, is called Gauḍa. Similarly Brahmānanda, the well-known author of the Laghucandrikā, though not born in Gauḍadeśa, has the epithet Gauḍa, probably as he was educated in Gauḍadeśa, Bengal, being, as is said, a fellow student of Gadādhara Bhaṭṭācārya. One who has any connexion, past, present, or future, in respect of oneself or one's ancestors, with the Gauḍadeśa may be a Gauḍa. On this one may be referred to MD, I. 3. 23 with Śabarasaśvāmīn's commentary in which it is said that a man who has set out for the city of Mathurā is regarded as a Māthura; similarly one who lives in the city of Mathurā, or one who has come out from the city of Mathurā is also called a Māthura.¹⁰

With regard to our author we should remember here the views of Bālakṛṣṇānanda Sarasvatī already once referred to. He writes (SMB, p. 6, ll. 9-12): There was in the country of Kurukṣetra a river called Hirarāvati.¹¹ On its banks there were some Gauḍa people, the pre-eminent of whom was our author, and as he was absorbed in deep meditation beginning from the Dvāpara age, his special name is not known to modern people and so he is celebrated by the general one.¹²

Let us notice here the observations made by Waller (op. cit., pp. 6 ff.). He thinks there was none named Gauḍapāda who is believed to have been the author of the present work. By the word Gauḍa-pādas we are to understand the four Books (prakaraṇas) of the work and Gauḍapādiyakārikā is the name for the whole work, as found in MSS. This last title seems to be somewhat artificial and it can be guessed that the work was commonly known as Gauḍapādi in the same way as the provincial expression Bhadracarī for Bhadracaryā. In fact both the titles Gauḍapādi and Āgamaśāstravivaraṇa have been shown by C. F. Hall in one of his contributions.¹³ Waller says further that the quotations from later works correspond to his opinion that no teacher known as Gauḍapāda was the author of the book, but it existed among the contemporary people as a fundamental work of a school and not as a production of a definite author. He shows from the Tibetan sources¹⁴ that though the work was known to the Buddhist authors as a Vedāntaśāstra in which the doctrines of the school are explained, nothing is known there of Gauḍapāda who is supposed to have composed it. Śāṅkara in his Śārīrakabhāṣya quotes twice, as shown above, from the work referring to our author (or authors) as those to whom was known the tradition of the Vedānta (vedāntārthasampradāyavid or simply sampradāyavid). The commentator, Govindānanda in his Ratnaprabhā and Ānandagiri in his Nyāyanirṇaya introduce the above opinion of Śāṅkara as the 'approval of the old' (vrddhasammati, BS, I. 4. 14 and II. 1. 9). Sureśvara has quoted two kārīkās (NSi, IV. 41, 42; our text I. 11 and 15 respectively) mentioning their author as Gauḍas (gauḍaiḥ),¹⁵ while he takes Śāṅkara as the representative of the Drāviḍa tradition. In the commentary on the NSi Jñānottara describes the quoted passages as gauḍapādiya-vākya. We have already seen in the PD (II. 28) the Gauḍa teaching, but the commentator, Rāmakaṣṇa, does not know

¹⁵ It is, however, not true that Sureśvara never mentions the name Gauḍapāda, for he uses it at least for once in his BBV, IV. 4. 886 (p. 1866). In the same work he has also used the words gauḍapādiya vacas (I. 4. 389, p. 510) and gauḍacārya (II. 1. 386, p. 951).

the author, he describes the passage quoted as ācārya-sammati. Sādānanda quotes in his VeS, § 33, two kārīkās, III. 44, 45, referring as tad uktam, and Nṛsiṃha Sarasvatī, the commentator, does not name their author simply alluding to them as vrddhasammati 'the opinion of the old.' Rāmattīrtha, another commentator, says that it is a contemporary opinion. Again, if we examine Kāśmīraka Yati, the author of the Advaitabrahmasiddhi (p. 277) we find no evidence that the Gauḍapādakārikā was known to him as a work of a single author. Vijñānabhikṣu has quoted kārīkās (II. 32, III. 5, 26) from the work in his Sāṅkhyapravacanabhāṣya, (I. 45, 47; 153; VI. 50). But there is nothing to show that Gauḍapāda was taken to be their author. Walliser thus says that not a single passage¹⁷ can be quoted from all these texts which can make us believe that Gauḍapādi had Gauḍapāda as its author. We are told that Śāṅkara received instruction from Govinda who was a disciple of Gauḍapāda with whom the former had a conversation and he had another conversation with Vyāsa himself. The same sort of contradiction is found also with regard to the residence of Govinda; one source gives it as the banks of the Narmadā and the other the Himālayas. This sort of things does not give us a historical clue.

¹⁶ Not vrddha, as writes Walliser.

¹⁷ Excepting, as he himself has pointed out, one passage from Ś's commentary on the ŚU, I. 8, where the following line occurs: tathā ca śukaśiṣyo gauḍapādācāryaḥ. But that the commentary is not by the great Ś is the view not only of Walliser but also of others including the present author.

W a l l e s e r thus finally observes that the whole tradition is fabulous, and with this the last of the arguments in favour of the authorship of Gauḍapādi by a certain G a u ḍ a p ā d a vanishes. And as one could not explain the word Gauḍapādi one imagined a fictitious G a u ḍ a p ā d a. Now he adds that for the history of Vedānta we can gather from the preceding discussion that in a time considerably before the activities of Ś a ṅ k a r a there existed a philosophical school in the country of Gauḍa and in the same district in which Buddhism flourished till the eighth century. This school for the first time put the traditions of the Vedas and Upaniṣads in the form of a śāstra, i.e., a school doctrine and embodied it in a collection of sayings (Spruchsummlung) consisting of the four pādas of the Gauḍapādakārikā. Already in the time of Ś a ṅ k a r a this text, the only older Vedānta text which has been preserved and perhaps the only one which was ever produced, enjoys high consideration quite independently of legendary traditions which connect Ś a ṅ k a r a with G o v i n d a and Ś u k a with G a u ḍ a p ā d a . The existence of the North Indian school at the beginning of the century preceding Ś a ṅ k a r a seems well-established.

We are, however, to consider here the following without entering into a hair-splitting discussion. There is a text before us known as the Āgamaśāstra or Gauḍapādakārikā, or passing under any other similar name; and of this text there must be an author. There may, however, be more than one author. The work may represent the view of the predominant school of a particular people. But can we only for this reason think that it is the production of the whole people of the land? When a very prominent man of a country pronounces something in public, it may be regarded as the opinion of the country itself, and not as his personal view, though he may not consult the people of the country before doing so. In the same way, it appears to me, that the present work is by one person and yet, it represents the views of the entire country to which he belonged. But who is that person? He is one G a u ḍ a. When there is no contradiction nor any incongruity, why should we not accept the tradition, as far as possible? Thus, as we have already seen, the actual name of the author is G a u ḍ a, or with the honorific word -pāda or ācārya added to it G a u ḍ a p ā d a, or G a u ḍ ā c ā r y a.

Much could be known of any author from the old records on which naturally one inclines to depend for ascertaining the truth. But they are so fantastic and self contradictory in the present case that it is almost impossible to find out the truth from them.¹⁸ These records are the accounts of the life of the great Śaṅkara and those who were connected with him in some way or other.¹⁹ Readers desirous of knowing these legendary accounts of Gauḍapāda are referred to those works themselves which are to be used very cautiously.

§ 8. The Date of Gauḍapāda

Now let us discuss the date of our author, and in doing so we shall begin from one of the old accounts of the school already referred to, viz., JM, in which Gauḍapāda is mentioned as having some connexion with a few Greeks. It is said there (10)¹ that the feet of Gauḍapāda were adored by Ayārcya, and he was the preceptor of such Niśāka mystics as Apalūnya. Here Ātmabodhendra, the commentator, adds something on the authority of such works as Gauḍapādollāsa of Harimiśra, and Patañjalivijaya (= °carita? of Rāmabhadra Dikṣita). He writes that when Gauḍapāda on a peak of the Himālayas was seeking after the truth of the self under the guidance of Śuka,² it was through his influence that the wrong Buddhist views (śauddhodani-kadadhvanām) of the persons headed by Ayārcya who was being attended by such Yogins belonging to the Western border of the country as Apalūnya and Damīśa (apalūnyadamiśādyaparāntyayogibhiś ca), as well as by Prāvṛti, the Śākya chief of Taxila (taṭṭasāsilādhiśa-śākyapṛāvṛti-pramukḥhaiḥ), were made to disappear.

If here one turns over the pages of The Indian Travels of Apollonius of Tyana by Osmond de Beauvoir Priaulx, JRAS, 1860, pp. 70 ff., one will easily see that Apalūnya in the Sanskrit text is no other than the Pythagorean philosopher Apollonius of Tyana, who flourished in the first century A.D. He travelled to India and came to the court of Phraotes who was the same as Prāvṛti in the Sanskrit text, the king of Taxila. And Damīśa of our text is identical with Damis, ² In connection with Gauḍapāda's tapasyā in the Himālayas the following story may be related here from Nārāyaṇa's ṭikā on MāU: The four parts of the MāU of the recension of the RV (yet, note that the Upaniṣad is said to belong to the AV) were explained by Gauḍapāda by his four Books (prakaraṇas). He was a disciple of Śuka and the grand preceptor of Ś. He flourished at the end of the age called Doṣāpara. At the hermitage of Badarikā by his devotion he propitiated Nārāyaṇa and having obtained a boon from him he entered into a cave of a mountain, so that he would not look at the face of any one born in the age of Kali. In this state he was approached by Ś and requested to come out from the cave, but he did not comply with the request. Yet, having written the four Books of his work on the leaves of a Banyan tree with red chalk he gave them to Ś. Report of Sanskrit Manuscripts in Southern India by E. Hultzsch, No. III. p. 133. But there is no end of such legends on which one can hardly rely.

the fellow traveller and friend of Apollonius. The last person in our text, Ayārcya, is the same and one with Iarchas (probably a corruption from Rac'h yas, op. cit., p. 83, note), a Greek king.³

All this looks well, but do you gain anything from it about the date in question? The Greek account simply relates the travel of Apollonius,⁴ being completely silent about Gaṇḍapāda. There is no doubt that some names of both the accounts are identical, but it does not follow from it that the persons having the same names are also identical. Supposing that the account is true it will be for a further creation of confusion in settling the date even of the great Ś, into which we do not enter here as useless.

Hence without having recourse to such legendary records for the determination of the date of our teacher

³ Perhaps it is M. Hiriyanna (IHQ, 1926, pp. 415-416) who has first made the identification. See also Gopinath Kaviraj, op. cit., pp. 22-23.

we should take a safer course by which at least the upper and lower limits of his time can be ascertained.

I think we have no reason for discarding what Walliser has said in this respect. So far three Buddhist writers are known to us, who have actually quoted Gaṇḍapāda, viz., Bhāvaviveka (cir. 500-550 A.D.),⁵ Śāntirakṣita (705-762 A.D.), and his disciple Kamalaśīla. Bhāvaviveka is the author of the Madhyamakahrdayakārikā as well as of its commentary Tarkajvālā, the full title being Madhyamakahrdayavṛtti Tarkajvālā. In chapter VIII of his work Bhāvaviveka reviews the system of the Vedāntins as he does in other chapters the systems of Sāṅkhya, Vaiśeṣika and Mīmāṃsā. In doing so Bhāvaviveka in his TJ, VIII has quoted passages from such texts as ChU, ŚU and MuU. Besides, there are some other passages quoted, four of them (10-13) being very important in the present connexion. While the first three have the closest relationship with three kārikās of our text the last (i.e. TJ, VIII. 13) is entirely identical with III. 5 of our text. There is, therefore, not an iota of doubt here that the GK was known to Bhāvaviveka. With reference to the other three kārikās cited by Bhāvaviveka, which are not identified in the GK, but have the closest relationship, we have to seek after another source.

As regards Śāntirakṣita he is the author among others of the Madhyamakālaṅkārikā as well as of its commentary called Madhyamakālaṅkāravṛtti. Besides, his disciple Kamalaśīla has written a Pañjikā on the former work just as on the Tattvasaṃgraha. Śāntirakṣita in his MAK, 93, discusses the views of the Aupaniṣadas (lit. Aupaniṣadānusārins, Tib. gsaṅ.ba.paḥi. rjes.su.ḥbraṅ.ba.dag),⁶ and in doing so he cites there not less than ten kārikās from our text which is referred to by Kamalaśīla in his Pañjikā as an Upaniṣat śāstra.⁷

Now as we have seen above we cannot reasonably deny the existence of the GK before Bhāvaviveka who has actually quoted it. Thus one may ascertain that the time of Gauḍapāda is cir. 500 A.D.

The following consideration, too, leads us to the same decision. Gauḍapāda has quoted almost fully, partially or substantially from works of some celebrated Buddhist teachers who flourished between 200 A.D. and 400 A.D. For instance, see our text, IV. 22^{a-b}:

⁷ It may be noted that though Śāntirakṣita has quoted here so many kārikās from GK he has not done so at all in TS (Śls. 328-335) either from this or any other work. For the kārikās quoted in Tibetan works see our text II. 3, 4, 5, 6, 18, 19, 20; III. 4, 5, 6, 8.

svato vā parato vāpi na kiñcid vastu jāyate |
And read here Nāgārjuna's (200 A.D.) MK, XXI. 13^{a-b}:

na svato jāyate bhāvaḥ parato naiva jāyate |
See our text, pp. 105 ff. and 127 ff. Again, we read in our ĀŚ, 7^{c-d} and 29^{c-d}:

prakṛter anyathābhāvo na kathañcid bhaviṣyati ||
And in MK, XV. 8^{c-d} we have:

prakṛter anyathābhāvo nahi jātūpapadyate ||
The following line occurs in ĀŚ, IV. 4^b:

abhūtaṃ naiva jāyate |

And let us cite here the following from the CS, 373^a of Nāgārjuna's disciple Āryadeva who probably lived, in the words of Winternitz (A History of Indian Literature, Eng. Tr., 1933, Vol. II, p. 350), "at about the turning point of the second and third century A.D.":

nābhūto nāma jāyate ||

See our text III. 44 (pp. 77-78):

laye sambodhayec cittaṃ vikṣiptaṃ śamayet punaḥ |
sakaṣāyaṃ vijānīyāc chamaprāptaṃ na cālayet ||

With this read the following from MAS, XIV. 9^{c-d}—10^{a-b} of Maitreya nātha or Asaṅga (400 A.D.):

linaṃ cittasya grhṇīyād uddhataṃ śamayet punaḥ |
śamaprāptaṃ upekṣeta tasminn ālambane punaḥ ||

Thus Gauḍapāda quoting the above teachers can in no way be placed before them, in other words he cannot be assigned a date before 400 A.D.

Here we are to consider another kārikā of our author, i.e., IV. 13 which runs thus (see pp. 114-115):

jātā ca jāyamānasya na-vyavasthā prasajyate |

Compare this with the following line quoted in MV, p. 13 from the AKV:

utpannasya punar utpattau kalpyamānāyām anavasthāprasāṅgaḥ.

Now this work, AKV, is by Yaśomitra. Before he wrote his own commentary on the AK of Vasubandhu (400 A.D.) there were at least three commentaries, two of them being written by Guṇamati (425 A.D.) and Vasumitra, as he himself says in the introductory śloka of his work. This shows that Yaśomitra lived in the 5th century A.D. And so, if Gauḍapāda's kārikā (i.e., IV. 13) is in fact based on the above line of the AKV his date naturally falls in the 5th century A.D.

Certainly this will militate against the traditional time of Śaṅkara or the succession of teachers and disciples of his school. But how far the accounts of this succession can be relied upon is a question which has not yet been settled finally or satisfactorily. Are not the traditional succession lists kept in different Maṭhas unscrupulously manipulated? Under these circumstances we have no course left to us other than the evidences of quotations and cross-references in early and reliable texts.⁸ § 9. Alleged Borrowing by Gauḍapāda

Let us discuss the question from a different point of view. There is a work *Paramārthasāra*⁹ attributed to Śeṣa who is apparently the mythical Śeṣa, as he is referred to in the work itself as ādhāra (8), i.e., jagad-ādhāra (87). From this some take him as Patañjali, the less mythical Śeṣa, the author of the Mahābhāṣya on Pāṇini.

It is also called Āryāpañcāśīti owing to the fact that it is composed in eighty-five stanzas in the Āryā metre, though in fact there are eighty-seven stanzas.¹⁰

⁸ Our old traditions are so divergent that according to them as well as the modern researches we shall have to place Śaṅkara some time between the 6th century B.C. and the 9th century A.D., viz., 6th century B.C., 4th century B.C., 1st century B.C., 4th century A.D., 6th century A.D., and the 9th century (788-820) A.D. The last date is now accepted by many a scholar. See Gopinath Kaviraj, op. cit., pp. 23 ff; Belvalkar, op. cit., pp. 209 ff.

⁹ There are so far at least five editions of this book, the latest and critical one being by S. S. Suryanarayana Sastri (Transliterated Text, English Translation and Notes), Karnataka Publishing House, Bombay, 1941.

¹⁰ It may be that the first two stanzas which are not in Āryā, but Upajāti, were added later on. But, if it is so, as regards the first of them, it was added long before Abhinavagupta who has adopted it just at the beginning of his PS², I. The last stanza (87: vedānta°) does not also appear to constitute the original, being added by a second hand, as is suggested by Suryanarayana Sastri, op. cit., p. 40, note. Mark here the employment of the perfect tense, in the word babandha. The original number, 85, can however, be obtained by reckoning an additional stanza between 18 and 19 given from a MS in a foot-note in the Trivandrum edition (PS) being fully supported by PS², 9 (and not 6 as in PS³).

It is a Vedāntic work.¹¹ Its excellence and importance can be understood by the simple fact that Abhinavagupta (in the end of the tenth and the beginning of the eleventh century A.D.), the great teacher of the Pratyabhijñā school and Poetics, adapted it,¹² though retaining the original title, for writing a manual of the Pratyabhijñā school, by some omissions, additions, alterations and improvements.¹³ That it is an adaptation of the first work is known from the statement of Abhinavagupta himself.¹⁴

In this work of Śeṣa there are some passages, or words, or thoughts that supply certain points of resemblance to those of our ĀŚ. In order to see if this fact can throw any light on the question of the time of Gauḍapāda we should like to discuss it in the following few lines.

S. S. Suryanarayana Sastrī (op. cit., p. viii) has noticed some of these points of resemblance¹⁵

¹² V. V. Sovani: JRAS, 1912, pp. 257 ff; K. C. Pandey: Abhinavagupta, 1935, pp. 57 ff; S. S. Suryanarayana Sastrī: NIA, Vol. I, pp. 37 ff.

¹⁴ See PS², I and 2. Iyengar's observation (JRAS, 1910, p. 1338) does not appear to be reasonable.

¹⁵ For easy reference I write below the kārikās of PS¹ mentioning the numbers of the corresponding kārikās of the GK:

(a) prāṇādyanantabhedair ātmānam saṃvitatya jālam iva |
saṃharati vāsudevaḥ svavibhūtyākṛīḍamāna iva || PS¹, 30.

cf. GK, II. 19.

and writes (p. ix) after discussing them as follows: "It seems plausible that Gauḍapāda was drawing on some earlier sources, agreeing in part, while rejecting in part, and that the rejection was not consistent or thorough. Such a hypothesis may well consider the Paramārthasāra the original drawn upon." There is not the least doubt that Gauḍapāda has drawn much upon earlier works, as it is perfectly clear throughout his book,¹⁶ but can Śeṣa's PS¹ be included in them, though it may appear to be so?

In order to avoid prolixity I propose to discuss only two points raised by Suryanarayana Sastrī

in the hope that this may decide the case. He writes :
 “Both are concerned with the three forms—Viśva, Taijasa and Prājña—as veiling the fourth which is the real.”¹⁷ This refers, as he says, to PS¹, 31 and GK, I. 1 and 11.

The most important thing to be pointed out here first is that between the two texts, ĀŚ and PS¹, the latter is certainly a later development, as a perusal of the texts will show. Let us, however, make an attempt to understand PS¹, 31 as it is before us without taking any help either from the commentator or from Abhinavagupta.¹⁸ The word jāgrat-svapna-suṣupta is an adjective of viśva-taijasaprajña. But what is to be understood from the abrupt statement that Viśva, Taijasa and Prājña are jāgrat, svapna and suṣupta respectively? What are these three, Viśva, Taijasa and Prājña? How can one know them? How is one to understand that there is only one and the same who is regarded as three (i.e., Viśva, etc.) owing to three different stages (i.e., jāgrat, etc.)? How is it that turya undoubtedly referring to Vāsudeva in the preceeding kārikā (30) is put in the neuter gender, ¹⁷ Is the last part of this statement exactly so? Do chādita in PS¹, 31 (= āvṛta in P², 34) and -baddha in kāryakāraṇabaddha and kāraṇabaddha in GK, I. 11 convey the same idea? We are to consider here GK, I. 15 and NSi (IV. 41, 42) where these two kārikās of Gaṇḍapāda are quoted.

¹⁸ He has here the following two kārikās (PS³, 34 and 35):

ṣṛṣṭiṣṭhiṣaṃhārā jāgra'svapnau suṣuptam iti tasmin |
 bhānti turye dhāmani tathāpi tair āvṛtaṃ bhātī

(In the first half of this kārikā in PS³ quoted in foot-note 2- svapnam is to be read as -svapnau.)

jāgrad viśvaṃ bhedāt svapnas tejaḥ prakāśamāhātmyāt | prājñāḥ supṛāvaṣṭhā jñānaghanatāt tataḥ param turyam

while the latter word is in the masculine?¹⁹ Moreover, what is the significance of taiḥ in the first half? If it is not superfluous, what is it that it refers to? How far are we justified with the commentator in taking the word with chādita in the second half? Again, why is it that eva should be used in the first half after tribhir? All this taken together shows, as far as I can judge, that Śeṣa's work presupposes that of Gaṇḍapāda, and not vice versa. Śeṣa had before him ĀŚ, I. 1-5 (as well as MaU, 3-7) upon which he has drawn adding something (ādimadhyanidhana) more quite independently as he has done throughout his book. While in ĀŚ there are five kārikās, Śeṣa has only one, and even in it he has made some addition. This on one hand and the metrical exigency on the other did not allow him, as seems to me, to express his ideas adequately with the result that there occurred some anomalies. Comparing PS¹ and PS² with the GK here it appears to me that as Śeṣa could not express himself adequately and consequently his kārikā became obscure Abhinavagupta added here one kārikā more, as has already been pointed out, explaining all that was absolutely necessary for its proper elucidation.

Now, what is the source or sources of Abhinava's interpretation here (kārikās 34, 35), without which we cannot understand the kārikā of Śeṣa? Certainly it was not only Gaṇḍapāda, for such things as śṛṣṭisthitisaṃhāra cannot be known from his work. One is therefore inclined to say with some amount of certainty that it was partly the work of Śeṣa, and partly the tradition connected with him, though under the present state of our knowledge we do not know if this tradition is recorded anywhere. Nevertheless, we have to accept its existence, as we cannot explain the difficulties without it. The question arises here as to how Abhinava came to know that tradition. Does it not persuade one to think that the distance of time between Śeṣa and Abhinava is not as wide as it is supposed to have been? What is there against thinking that PS¹ and PS² belonged to the same period, though the former must have evidently been a little earlier? In this case the question of the interpretation of the present kārikā of Śeṣa given by Abhinava can very satisfactorily be explained. What is there that can be offered for pushing back the date of PS¹ to a period before GK?

Again, with reference to the creation of the world Śeṣa in his work which deals with the Vedānta has effected a synthesis of the Sāṅkhya and the Vedānta systems by the introduction of the creation from Upendra (= Viṣṇu = Vāsudeva = Hari = Nārāyaṇa-Paramātman = Brahman) through prakṛti with the gradual evolution from it of buddhi (= mahat), etc. In the process of the creation he has accommodated also the theory of aṇḍa 'cosmic germ,' found, as for instance, in the Manusamhitā, I. 8 ff. and the Viṣṇu Purāṇa, I. 2. 58 ff. Here we are to note what Kullūka observes on Manusamhitā, I. 8 :

abhidhyānapūrvikāṃ śṛṣṭiṃ vadato manoh prakṛtir acetanā svatantrā pariṇamata ity ayaṃ pakṣo na saṃmataḥ. kintu tridaṇḍivedāntasiddhānta evābhimateḥ pratibhāti.

It is further elucidated by him in another place (I. 15) :

nanv abhidhyānapūrvakasṛṣṭyabhidhānad vedānta-siddhānta eva manor abhimata iti prag uktam, tan na saṅgacchate. idāni mahadādikrameṇa sṛṣṭyabhidhānad vedāntadarśanena ca paramātmana evākāśādikrameṇa sṛṣṭir uktā.²⁰ ucyate. prakṛtito mahadādikrameṇa sṛṣṭir iti bhagavadbhāskariyadarśane 'py upapadyata iti tadvido vadanti.²⁰

Now Bhāskara is one of the post-Śaṅkara commentators of the BS. Undoubtedly he was in the ninth century A.D. being criticised by Vācaspati Miśra (841 A.D.) in his Bhāmali (BS, III. 3. 29). Śeṣa seems therefore to have been well acquainted with the Vedantic system maintained by Bhāskara and has then combined his theory with that of Manu and others according to whom in the process of ceation there intervenes the theory of aṇḍa.

I do not therefore think that I can concur with Suryanarayana Sastri in suggesting that "the Paramārthasāra is the original drawn upon." (p. ix).

²⁰ See Bhāskara's commentary on the BS (Chaukbamba Sanskrit Series, 1914), II. I. 26: tataś ca brahmaṇaḥ pariṇāmānupapatteḥ pradhānam eṣṭavyam iti tātparyārthaḥ. Udayana observes in his Nyāyakūsumāñjali, p. 332: brahmapariṇater iti bhāskaragotire yujyate.

In passing we are to take up another question in this connexion. B. L. A t r e y a having noticed "much common between Kārikās (i.e., GK) and Yogavāsiṣṭha not only in thought, but also in language"²¹ concludes that the latter is prior on the following three grounds: (1) The kārikās do not form "an independent treatise on the Advaita Philosophy," being "a sort of commentary on the Māṇḍūkya Upaniṣad." (2) "On the other hand, the philosopher Vasiṣṭha claims to have received his doctrines directly from the cosmic mind (Brahmā) and to have realised their truth in his own experience. The philosophy of Vasiṣṭha includes almost all the views held by Gauḍapāda." And (3) "Gauḍapāda-kārikās represent a later phase of the Advaita philosophy, when it tended to become critical, hostile and polemical towards other contemporary schools of thought, whereas Yogavāsiṣṭha represents the earlier phase."

As the space at my disposal does not allow me here to enter into a detailed discussion I desire simply to make a few observations as briefly as I can. I do not see that I can follow the above arguments. For, supposing that the GK is a sort of commentary and Vasiṣṭha received his doctrines directly from Brahmā, are we in any way justified in thinking that the YV is prior to the GK? Does it follow from that? As regards the third argument of A t r e y a he thinks that the Advaita philosophy as represented in the GK is of a later phase, because it is "critical, hostile and polemical towards other" systems. But may one ask here: Is there anything in the GK that may be regarded as "critical, hostile and polemical?" If so, what and where is it so? On the contrary, one may find there (GK, III. 17; IV. 3-6) clear non-hostility (avirodha), and there is no instance of anything that is critical and polemical. If, however, the mention of different views in the GK is meant thereby, the case is the same also with the YV.²²

²¹ Yogavāsiṣṭha and its Philosophy, 1932, pp. 14-15.

It is not always safe to conclude the priority or posteriority of one of two works simply seeing the same or similar passage, or thought, occurring in both of them. For instance, we read the following in the GK, II. 6²³ and IV. 31:

ādāv ante ca yan nāsti vartamane'pi tat tathā |

The same line occurs also in the YV, IV. 45. 45 and a similar one in III. 11. 13, as quoted in our text, p. 142, note 3. Now, apart from the question of the date of the GK, can we determine with any amount of certainty the priority or posteriority of one of the two works unless we take into consideration the other factors that are connected herewith? One may be referred here to the present Annotation on GK, IV. 31, and it will be found that the same thought only in slightly different words is expressed in such works as MK and ĀS, which are undisputably far earlier than YV. Now, if we see that Gauḍapāda has abundantly drawn upon such earlier works can we ever think in this or similar cases that he has borrowed from YV, unless there is any strong ground for doing so? When there are two texts containing the same thing, one earlier and the other later, one may quote from either of them; but to decide definitely as to from which one it is actually done one should discuss carefully.

²³ A t r e y a has noticed it.

Another instance of what is common to both GK and YV, as noted by Ātreya, is the non-difference between the states of wakefulness and dream (jāgrat and susupta), as found in GK, II. 5 and YV, IV. 9. 11 ff. Here, too, when we see that the first half of the GK clearly refers to the BU, IV. 3-14 (see p. 19), upon which, just as upon other Upaniṣads, Gauḍapāda draws so much, as is evident from the work itself,²⁴ how can we think that YV is here the source of GK? On the contrary, a careful perusal of YV will at once show that in his answer to the question put to him by Rāma about the difference between wakefulness and dream Vasiṣṭha has written a number of ślokas (YV, IV. 19. 9 ff), and attempted thereby only to explain what is very briefly stated in GK. Does this fact point to the priority or posteriority of YV to GK?²⁵

²⁴ See next section.

²⁵ According to Ātreya the date of YV is the sixth century A.D. But his arguments do not appear to me to be strong or convincing. It may be noted here in this connection that there are two things that may specially be mentioned in Śvāmī Bhūmānanda's paper entitled Priority of the Yogavāsiṣṭha to Śaṅkarācārya: (1) Śaṅkara quotes (BS, III. 4. 50) the Vasiṣṭhadharmaśāstra (ed. A. A. Führer, Bombay, 1883), X.18;

§ 10. The Works of Gauḍapāda

With regard to the works ascribed to Gauḍapāda the only one that can be accepted with certainty as written by him is the ĀŚ. The authorship of a few other books is ascribed to him. The most important of them is a bhāṣya on the Sāṅkhyakārikā of Īśvarakṛṣṇa. There is a bhāṣya under his name also on the Uttaragītā. But there is no strong ground for holding that they are actually by Gauḍapāda, the author of the ĀŚ, nor is there anything of the nature that can decide the case otherwise, though I incline to subscribe to the view that they are not by Gauḍapāda. A commentary, too, on the NUTU is attributed to him. There are three other works which pass under the name of Gauḍapāda as their author. A commentary on the Durgāsaptasatī is one of them. This is referred to by the great Tantric teacher Bhāskara rāya in his commentary on the same and (2) mentions the name of Vasiṣṭha in his commentary on the BG, XIII. 4. But the question whether these two Vasiṣṭhas, the Vasiṣṭha of YV as well as the Vasiṣṭha in the list of the teachers of the Śaṅkara school are identical, remains to be settled, though according to some of the authors of the ṭikās on BG, the Vasiṣṭha referred to by Śaṅkara is the author of YV.

kavacaṃ bijam ādiṣṭam argalā śaktir iṣyate |
kilakaṃ kilakaṃ prāhuḥ saptaśatyāṃ mahāmanoh ||

iti gauḍapādadhṛtavacanāt.

And again: yady api vedāntamūrdhanyair gauḍapādācāryaiḥ sarvam idaṃ nirviśeṣacitpratipādakaśāstraparatvena vyākhyātam.^o work.¹ The other two are Tantric treatises, viz., *Subhagodaya*² and Śrīvidyārātnasūtra.

Here arises a question: Can we think that there are two Gauḍapādas, one Vedāntic and the other Tantric, being the authors of works on the Vedānta and Tantricism respectively? In the Śrīvidyārṇava which is a Tantric work by Pragalbha-cārya, Śaṅkarācārya is said to have been the founder of a Tantric school. There is in this work also a list of the succession of his teachers and disciples. But it seems impossible to reconcile this list with the traditional one of the Advaita Vedānta school. So the list in the Śrīvidyārṇava hardly helps us in this matter. Nevertheless, we may simply note in the list given here that there are two Gauḍapādas, one of them being mentioned as Gauḍa (No. 55) and the other Gauḍapādaka (No. 65),³ who is, in fact, the same as Gauḍapāda, the suffix -ka being evidently on account of the metrical exigency. On this the reader may form his own judgment.

§ 11. The Sources

The sources of the Āgamaśāstra, which one naturally desires to know, roughly fall into three classes, viz.,

¹ It is said that there is a bhāṣya on it by Śaṅkara.

² In the verse containing the word as quoted by Rājendranātha Ghoṣa in his Advaitavāda (in Bengali), p. 227, the actual reading is Gauḍapādakah. But Gopināth Kaviraj iop. cit., p. 53), who has not quoted the verse, reads only Gauḍapāda leaving out the suffix -ka which seems to be right.

(1) Vedic texts: Vedas and Upaniṣads, (2) Schools or Teachers, and (3) Buddhist works.

With regard to class (1), these are mostly Upaniṣads, Vedas being quoted in not more than two cases (III. 24b and c). It is, however, to be noted in this connexion that when there is a passage which occurs both in a Veda and in an Upaniṣad it is very difficult to ascertain as to whether the reference is actually to the former or to the latter. For instance, here in III. 24b we have indro māyābhir iti. This is found in RV, VI. 47. 18 as well as in BU, II. 5. 19. How can we, in this case, ascertain that the reference is in fact to the one and not to the other? The case is exactly the same with the second instance III. 24 c) of a quotation from a Veda. Similarly with regard to II. 24 we know much of kāla 'time' from the AV, XIX. 53, 54 and the ŚU, I. 2, IV. 1. But here it is very difficult to conclude whether the reference is actually to the former or to the latter, or to the both of them. Again, the *Kālavid*s 'knowers of time' are, as says Ānandagiri, astronomers, and it is not impossible that our author might have alluded to some work of them, or simply to the view held by them or to their school.

In the course of the present Annotation many references to different Upaniṣads have been inserted in support of a point or points in our text, but which of them, if any, is in fact meant by the author in any particular case we cannot say definitely. It may be that in some cases the Upaniṣadic authority, really meant by the author, is different from what the present annotator has quoted. For instance, with regard to pāda (II. 21) which is capable of being interpreted differently, various references are given in the Annotation, or still other references may be shown. But it is not easy to ascertain the particular reference or references the author himself intended. Nevertheless, it is certain that the author had in his mind any one or more of these or similar passages when he was writing his book.

Among the references in the Annotation the names of the Bhagavadgītā (XIII. 22 in II. 22 of our text) and the Brahmasūtra (II. 3. 19-32 in II. 23 of our text) will be found. But we cannot be sure that these two works are actually drawn upon by our author, though they may elucidate the texts to some extent.

Similarly for the explanation of our text there will be found some references in the Annotation to such minor Upaniṣads (for instance, in II. 32) as Avadhūta Up., 8; Āśrama°, 4; Ātma°, 31; Jābāla°, 6; Tripurā-tāpani°, V. 10; Brahmabindu°, 10. But whether these minor Upaniṣads are prior to the Āgamaśāstra is to be left as an open question, though some of them such as Brahmabindu° and Jābāla°, are before Ś a ṇ k a r a as is quite clear from his commentary on BS, III. 2. 18 and 4. 20 respectively.

In five places (III. 12, 24, 25, 26 and 36) passages from Upaniṣads are expressly quoted, while in III. 11 and 23 the words Taittirīya and śruti are actually mentioned and in II. 3 a passage of the BU, IV. 3. 10 is clearly alluded to with the word śrūyate. Similarly in II. 5 another passage from the same Upaniṣad (BU, IV. 3. 14) is clearly referred to though with the word manīṣins and not śruti as before and usual. In III. 12, 13 and 15 references to Upaniṣads are also very clear. In two or three more places (I. 2, 8, 9) references seem to have been made to Upaniṣads.²

It will be seen that no Upaniṣad is quoted or referred to by our author in his last Book, Alātāśānti. There is absolutely nothing of the kind.³

As regards class (2) of the sources readers are referred to § 6: The Name of the Work of the present Introduction, p. lxiii, where the names of different schools or teachers alluded to in our text, are mentioned.

It appears from these names that some of the schools or teachers mentioned by our author here were undoubtedly prominent at his time, but gradually they have lost their prominence and have fallen almost into a state of oblivion.

With regard to class (3) of our sources, i.e., the Buddhist texts, the reader is referred to the Annotation on II. 31, 32, 35 (cf 38), 44, 46, and most of the kārikās in Book IV.

§ 12. The Bṛhadāranyaka Upaniṣad as the Main Upaniṣadic Source of the Āgamaśāstra

In the preceding section we have seen that the BU is one of the sources of the ĀŚ in which there are some quotations from or references to the former. In the present section it is proposed to examine to some extent the inter-relationship of these two works by which we shall see that the main Upaniṣadic source of the ĀŚ is the BU.

² See the Annotation.

³ With regard to the word durdarśa in IV. 100 we cannot say definitely that it refers to KU, II. 12, as it is often found also in Buddhist works.

From the text of the ĀŚ as it is before us it is quite clear that G a u ḍ a p ā d a has drawn much upon it. In fact, Book I of our text is mainly based on it. Nay, it may be declared that Book I of the ĀŚ is nothing but an epitome or essence of the BU, IV. 2-3 with some clear exposition and an addition of the *upāsana*¹ 'meditation' of Praṇava or Om. By writing the first Book of the ĀŚ G a u ḍ a p ā d a has in reality made a key to that portion of the BU, without which it would have been extremely difficult to understand its true significance.

The opening part of the ĀŚ, i.e., the part dealing with the three divisions of the One (i.e., Puruṣa) such as Viśva, etc. (I. 1-4, 10), is to be found only in different words in the BU, IV. 2-3, as says Śaṅkara very clearly on BU, IV. 3. 1 (p. 519).²

¹ III. 1 and Appendix X on it.

² atra ca jāgratsvapnasuṣuptaturiyāny upanyastāny anyaprasaṅgena indhaḥ (IV. 2. 2), praviviktāhārataraḥ (IV. 2. 3), sarve prāṇāḥ (IV. 2. 4), sa eṣa neti neti (IV. 2. 4), idānīm jāgratsvapnādīdvāreṇaiva mahatā tārkeṇa vistarato dhigamaḥ kartavyaḥ (p. 519).

See here also Śaṅkara's observation in showing the relationship between BU, IV. 2 and IV. 3 (p. 518):

"vijñānam ānandaṁ brahmety avagatam. tad eva punar indhasamjñāḥ praviviktāhāras tato 'ntarhdaye līngātmā praviviktāhārataras tataḥ pareṇa jagatātmā. See further on IV. 3. 1 (p. 519).

We see in our text (I. 1-4, 10) that the One, i.e., *Puruṣa*³ (=Brahman=Ātman of the MāU, 2) owing to different states is called Viśva, Taijasa, Prajña and Turya (or Turiya, I. 15). None of these names excepting Prājña (BU, IV. 3. 21 and 35) is, however, to be found in the BU. For Viśva it reads (IV. 2. 2) Indha 'shining' which is the same as Indra, the former, as the Upaniṣad would say, being used by people cryptically.⁴ As to why the Puruṣa is called Indha Sureśvara says (BBV, IV. 2. 37) that 'because he shines day and night' (idhyate harniṣaṁ yasmād indhanāmā tataḥ pumān). This 'shining' implies, according to Ānandagiri, his enjoyment of gross things in the waking state (sthūlārthabhoktṛtvena sadā jāgare sphūrteḥ). Śaṅkara is found to have employed both the terms in his commentary on the BU, Indha (BU, IV. 3. 1, p. 519) and Vaiśvānara (BU, IV. 2. 2-4, pp. 513-519), but not Viśva, so far as goes my information, with regard to the commentary referred to. From the text of the BU (IV. 2. 3, 3. 11, 35) itself it appears that ³ As in the original of the text, i.e., BU, IV. 3 we have this word.

⁴ It is a well-known saying in Brāhmaṇas that gods are fond of the cryptic, as it were, and dislike the evident 'parokṣapriyā iva hi devāḥ pratyakṣadviṣaḥ' —BU, IV. 2. 2). Sureśvara says (in BBV, IV. 2. 37; p. 1365) that even now people do not like to call a superior person directly by his personal name:

*pratyakṣanāmagrahaṇam pradviṣanti jagaty api !
śreyāṁso 'mukamiśāś ta ity uktīm kāmāyanti ca*

In referring to a superior person the use of amuḥa 'so and so' or uni in Bengali, is still found. It is to be noted that in the country, at least in Bengal, a woman does not call her husband by his name, but for it uses such words as uni.

if any other term for Viśva is to be chosen from that work it is only śārīra 'existing in the body,' 'embodied.' But Gauḍapāda has not accepted it, but has adopted a new name, Viśva, probably thinking the latter to be more expressive of the idea behind it. Finally in the hand of the author of MāU it has undergone a further change in the form of Vaiśvānara 'common-to-all' perhaps for the same purpose.

Of these names Turya (or Turiya) 'fourth' is evidently not a name in fact, but as it is described after the first three Viśva, etc., it is so called, being their fourth. In the BU Indha-Indra is a name, no doubt, but Taijasa and Prājña were originally mere adjectives,⁵ becoming names afterwards. Sometimes the appellation Līngātman is found for Taijasa, as writes Śāṅkara in his commentary on the BU, IV. 2. 3 (p. 515), IV. 3. 1 (p. 518). Similarly saṁsṛta is used for Prājña as says Sureśvara (BBV, IV. 3. 5, p. 1377). Undoubtedly this word clearly expresses the state of the Person.

As regards the wording of our text in the first Book of ĀŚ with which we are now concerned the following comparison may be made:

(i) With regard to Viśva our author writes (I. 2): daṁṣṇāṁśimukhe viśvah.⁶ See here BU, IV. 2. 2: indho ha nāmaṣa yo 'yaṁ daṁṣṇe 'kṣan puruṣaḥ (= BU, II. 3. 5; IV. 2. 2; V. 5. 2, 4).⁷

⁵ See BU, II. 5. 8.

⁶ Mark that the MāU is here silent.

⁷ The idea that a person is seen in the eye and specially in the right one is often found in Upaniṣadic texts. Besides the BU quoted above see ChU, IV. 15. 1, VII. 7. 4; KtU, IV. 2, 17; MU, VII. 11. It simply signifies that

(ii) In I. 2 we have ākāśe ca hṛdi prājñāḥ, and we read ya eṣo 'ntar hṛdaya ākāśaḥ in BU, II. 1. 17, IV. 2. 3, 4. 22. Cf. TU, I. 6. 1.

(iii) In I. 3 there is pravivikṭabhuḥ,⁸ and in this connexion we read tasmād eṣa pravivikṭāhāratara ivaiva bhavati in the BU, IV. 2. 3.

(iv) With regard to the third or suṣṛta state of the Person in I. 3, 4 there is ānandabhuḥ or ānanda, and in BU, IV. 3. 32 we read eṣo'sya parama ānandaḥ. See also, Op. cit., IV. 3. 33.⁹

It is to be noted here that the above conception of Puruṣa is found also in ChU, VIII. 7-12 in the course of Prajāpati's instruction to Indra and Virocana. Here, too, the first three names, Viśva, etc. are not given, Śāṅkara has used different appellations for them; viz., for Viśva he writes Akṣipuruṣa 'eye-person' (VIII. 7, 4, 7 9), or Chāyāpuruṣa 'shadow-person' (VIII. 10.4), or Chāyātman 'shadow-self' (VIII. 7. 4, 8. 1, 2);¹⁰ he is visible to our eyes, and this means that he is the ordinary incorporated soul (śārīra-ātman). This is quite evident from Gauḍapāda's employment of the word -mukha after daṁṣṇāṁśi (I. 1: daṁṣṇāṁśimukhe 'in the front of the right eye'). As to why the right eye is specially mentioned Sureśvara says (BBV, V. 2. 37-38, p. 1365) that it may be due to some excellence of the right eye, which might have been known to the smṛti, or to the fact that the right limbs of a man is more vigorous than the left ones. Sometimes the left eye is also referred to (BU, IV. 2. 3). See below.

⁸ See also I. 4.

⁹ That the sentence yatra supto na kiñcana° in the MāU, 5, p. 224, is quoted from the BU, IV. 3. 19 is already shown. Introduction: §2, p. xlii.

¹⁰ He uses this term also in his commentary on BS, I. 2. 13; on I. 3. 43 he has also śārīra.

for Taijasa he has Svapnātman (VIII. 11. 1-2); and for Prājña he employs Suṣuptastha (VIII, 11. 1-2).¹¹ For Turya we have in the Upaniṣad (VIII. 12. 3)

¹¹ It is to be noted that Śāṅkara while in his commentary on BU gives all the three names, Viśva, etc., he does not do so in the commentary on the ChU. It is further to be noticed that he, though so very fond of quoting śrutis does not refer to ChU in his commentary on BU, nor BU in that on ChU.

A few words may be added here as to why Viśva is said to be in the eye or in the right eye and consequently is called Akṣipuruṣa, Chāyāpuruṣa or Chāyātman.

To understand the Highest Self (paramātman) is very difficult for a man who is not properly trained. It took Indra, as says the ChU, VIII. 7. 3 ff., not less than one hundred and one years to realize him. So he is instructed to do it gradually, following the maxim of the view of the star Arundhatī 'Alcor' belonging to the Great Bear (Arundhatīdarśananyāya). The star being a very small one cannot be seen at once. So a man in order to show it to another man first points out to the latter somethings other than the actual star one by one and finally succeeds in doing so. Śāṅkara writes (ChU, VIII. 12. 1) the same thing in another way: On the second night of the bright half of a month a man desirous of showing a second man the fine moon first points out a tree before the latter saying: 'See, there is the moon.' In the same way he points out to him a series of trees one by one and then the peak of a mountain, on which the moon is visible, and thus the second man actually sees her. Similarly in our case, the mind of an ordinary man being too much attached to external things cannot at once grasp the Highest Self who is extremely subtle. Therefore, he is first instructed to know his incorporated Self (śārīra ātman), other Selves or the different states of the Self being described gradually. Now, how to know the incorporated Self? What is the best means for it? The sage of the Upaniṣads says: "Look here. Here is my right eye. Look at it. What do you find in it?" Certainly he would see himself reflected thereon. And pointing out the shadow the sage would tell him 'Here is the Self.' This is elaborately described in the episode of Pījāpati and his two disciples, Indra and Virocana, in the ChU, VIII. 7-12, where it is said that the Self is to be seen not only in the eyes, but also on a looking glass (ādarśa, water ap), and an earthen jar filled with water (udaśarāva). Śāṅkara rightly adds here (ChU, VIII. 7. 4; also such things as the blade of a sword (khaḍgādi). See KtU, IV. 2, II. 17-18.

quite appropriately Uttamapuruṣa 'the Highest Self'.¹²

That this conception of Puruṣa in ChU is a later development of that in the BU goes without saying. Now, though the ChU like the BU is far earlier than our text, there is nothing which can show that it is the former and not the latter which has been drawn upon by our author; yet, we have already seen what can be said in favour of BU.

In support of the view that the main source of the ĀŚ is BU we may discuss here one point more. The idea of Brahman (=Puruṣa=Ātman) as having four fourths or quarters (catuṣpād) at the beginning of the MāU is not a new one as it is found long before it even in the RV, X. 90. 3¹³ as well as in ChU, III. 18. 2.¹⁴ The difference of these texts lies, however, in the fact that the quarters (pādas) are different in them. For instance, in the RV referred to above all the beings (viśvā bhūtāni) are regarded as one quarter, and the remaining three quarters (tripād) are said to be in the heaven, while in the ChU, IV. 5-8

¹³ See ĀŚ, II. 21.

¹⁴ For minor Upaniṣads see Brahmopaniṣad, 2: tatra catuṣpadam brahma vibhāti; NPIU, V. 1; NUTU, 1; RUTU, 3: so 'yam ātmā catuṣpād.

the four quarters each consisting of four parts (catuskālā) are named as Prakāśavat 'shining,' Anantavat 'endless,' Jyotiṣmat 'luminous,' and Āyatanavat 'having an abode.'¹⁵ In another place of the same Upaniṣad (III. 18. 1-6) the quarters of Brahman are described differently with reference to person (adhyātma) and with reference to divinities (adhidaivata). With reference to person they are speech (vāc), breath (prāṇa), the eye (caḥṣus) and the ear (śrotra) representing respectively with reference to the divinities fire (agni), wind (vāyu), the sun (āditya) and quarter (diś). But in the MāU the quarters are described quite in a new way and it is remarkable. It is said that these four quarters are nothing but the same Self with its four states. The first three of them are waking (jāgrat), dreaming (svapna), and deep sleep (suṣupta). And the Self with them is called Vaiśvānara. 'common-to-all,' Taijasa 'brilliant,' and Prājña 'intelligent' respectively. The fourth state is the true or absolute essence of the Self having no connexion whatsoever with anything else. In this state the Self is regarded as śānta 'quiescent,' śiva 'blissful' and advaita 'without a second.'

It is to be noted here that while in RV and ChU the Puruṣa or Brahman is represented as the Universal or World Self, in the MāU it is represented as the individual Self though ultimately in fact it is identical with the Universal Self.

Now, it is remarkable that though in the MāU, as ¹⁵ For details see the Upaniṣad.

we have seen above, there is a clear mention and description of the four quarters of the Self (catuspād), in the ĀŚ it is not so. Even the particular word catuspād or any of its possible equivalents is not to be found here. Up to kārikā 5 we come across the three-fold division of the Self, viz., Viśva (instead of Vaiśvānara as in the MāU, 3), Taijasa and Prājña (I. 1-4). It is clearly said in our text (I. 1-2) that the One exists in three ways in the body, and this idea is further expressed in I. 3-5. Yet, it cannot be said from this that the idea of four quarters is altogether unknown to the author of the ĀŚ, as it is implied in I. 10-15 in which the word turya or turiya, which is the same in meaning 'fourth,' as caturtha in the MāU, 7, is used. It is further implied by the author's employment of the word pāda in I. 25.¹⁶ This difference between the ĀŚ and the MāU with regard to the idea of four pādas, implied in the former and expressed in the latter, is significant. It shows that the origin of the ĀŚ is not the MāU, but the BU in which the idea of pādas in this connexion did not then so develop.¹⁷

En passant we should like to discuss one thing more. There is a very striking difference at the very beginning between the two texts, MāU and ĀŚ. It is this that while the MāU begins (1-2) highly extolling Om symbolically identifying it with Brahman-Ātman, the ĀŚ has here nothing of the kind. It simply proceeds gradually to describe the One with its first three states, Viśva, Taijasa and Prājña (I. 1-5) the fourth having come afterwards (I. 10). Here in the ĀŚ till kārikā 19 there is no mention of, or reference to Om. So it is to be found that here in our text mention is made first of the One and then of Om. This order is quite right and logical. For, here there are two things, the object which is to be approached or realized (upeya) and its means (upāya). And it is reasonable that the object is stated first and then the means. Here the object is the realization of the Puruṣa or Self in its absolute state and the means is the meditation of Om. This is done in the ĀŚ, but it is quite reverse in the MāU, for here the means Om is stated first and then gradually the object (3-7) which is repeated later on (12). The author of the MāU seems to have been much influenced by earlier Upaniṣads, (such as ChU, I. 1. 1; TU, I. 8. 1) and too much bent on the glorification of Om, and this is why he has changed the reasonable order found in the ĀŚ. There is no upāsanā of Praṇava in the BU and this is why our author of the ĀŚ did not include it in the main thesis of his work. Then independently of the BU in which no means for the realization of the object is shown Gauḍapāda has added the remaining portion of the first Book of his ĀŚ setting forth Praṇava and its upāsanā.

So far with regard to Book I. Let us now take up Book II and see the connexion it has with the BU. This Book is rightly called Vaitathya 'unreality' as it shows the unreality of the world in the waking state just like that of the experience in dream. This is the subject discussed herein by Gauḍapāda with various arguments. And here, too, he has taken his stand on the BU, IV. 3, where it is clearly declared that the two states, waking and dream, are in fact one. Not only are passages quoted from the BU, or referred to by him (II. 3, 5), but they are supported by his own arguments. This will be quite clear if one takes pains to read BU, IV. 3 and the second Book of the ĀŚ. And it should be noted that here in the latter we find the oldest interpretation of that portion of the BU, though in a concise, yet, very substantial form.

In Book III we are referred to BU not less than six times (12, 13, 15, 24, 25 and 26).

Thus we may safely conclude that the main Upaniṣadic source of the ĀŚ is the BU.

§ 13. Pre-Śaṅkara Teachers of the Vedānta and their Works

Setting apart what we know of the Vedānta from the Śruti-prasthāna 'the Course of Revelation' or the Vedic literature, i. e., the Mantras and Brāhmaṇas including the Āraṇyakas and Upaniṣads, as well as from the Smṛti-prasthāna 'the Course of Tradition or Remembered Texts', such as the Mahābhārata with the Bhagavadgītā, it may conveniently be divided into two, pre-Śāṅkara and post-Śāṅkara.

[Among the teachers of the pre-Śāṅkara Vedānta the most distinguished is Bādarāyaṇa, the celebrated author of the Brahmasūtras, the source of which is the Upaniṣads. It is the Brahmasūtras that constitute the Sūtra-prasthāna 'the Course of Sūtras.']

We all know that the difference of opinions is but natural. Owing to various factors the same thing is viewed differently by different persons. So it is found in the Brāhmaṇas that there are both the offering of oblation before sun-rise (agudita-homa) and the offering of oblation after sun-rise (udita-homa), there being a regular discussion thereof establishing that the latter is preferable and not the former (Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, XXV. 5-6; Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, II. 1. 2-8; cf. however, II. 1. 2. 12). There are also functions in these Brāhmaṇas, which are discarded saying that these are not to be preferred (ādṛtya) or performed (kārya), though they are actually enjoined by others. There are many such contradicting, obscure or dubious cases, and an attempt has also been made in later works to find out a solution of these problems.¹

Now as with regard to karman the teachers had their different views, so they differed also on points of jñāna. In some cases they entertained even quite opposite views. For instance, with regard to creation while a sage of a certain Upaniṣad (i.e., TU, II. 7. 1; see ChU, III. 19. 1) tells us: 'In the beginning, verily, this was non-existent (asad vā idam agra āsīd),' but from another text (i.e., Aitareya Āraṇyaka, II. 4. 1) we know: 'Verily, in the beginning this was only Self (ātmā vā idam eka evāgra āsīd).' And the following is found in the ChU, VI. 2. 1-2, evidently refuting TU, II. 7. 1 quoted above: "Verily, in the beginning this was, my dear, existent only one without a second. On this some say that verily in the beginning this was non-existent only one without a second; from that non-existent the existent was produced. But, my dear, whence could it be? How from non-existent could the existent be produced? On the contrary, my dear, verily, in the beginning this was existent, only one without a second."

From the above it is quite clear that all the śrutis do not always tell us the same thing, clearly there is difference among them.² Such being the case the question arises as to which of them is to be accepted as valid and which is to be rejected as not valid. How can one say that this is valid, and that is not valid? For, as śruti there is no difference whatsoever.³ Therefore if you accept one, you will have to accept all of them. And in that case you cannot arrive at any definite

tasyārthavādarūpāṇi niscitya svavikalpajāḥ |
ekatvinām dvaitinām ca pravāda bahudhā smṛtāḥ ||

³ Śāṅkara has rightly observed (BS, III. 2. 15): nahi vedavākyānāḥ kasyacid arthavattvaṃ kasyacid anarthavattvaṃ iti yuktaṃ pratipattuḥ pramāṇatvaviśeṣāt.

conclusion. And if there is no conclusion of any kind the teaching of the Vedānta has no value to a person as it does not or cannot lead him to his final goal. The Vedānta is not a science for mere speculation, for one is to adjust one's life according to it. For only in this way one can fulfil the mission of one's life. It was therefore felt absolutely necessary by the teachers to bring into a harmony, a compromise or a connected sequence, all conflicting, obscure or dubious statements of the sages of the Upaniṣads. This was the origin on one hand of the Mīmāṃsāsūtras with regard to the question of ḥarman, and on the other of the Brahmasūtras in respect of jñāna.⁴

⁴ Let us however put here a question: Are we right in thinking that even through the methods or maxims (nyāyas) shown in the Brahmasūtras in connexion with the explanation of the Upaniṣadic texts, we can in all cases get their true significance? By 'true significance' we mean the significance intended by their respective sages. It is true that the word asat may imply in some cases 'unfolded' or 'that of which the name and form are unfolded' (avyākṛta or avyākṛtanāmarūpa). For instance, see asac ca sac ca parame vyoman (RV, X. 5. 7); or nāsad āsīn na sac āsīt tadānīm, (Op. cit., X. 129. 1). In such cases asat does not mean 'false, non-existent' (nirupāḥya asat), as the son of a barren woman, though in other cases it may actually mean so. Now considering the above passage of the ChU it is clear that the word asat in the TU quoted above is used in its literal sense, i.e., the sense of unreal non-existent (nirupāḥya asat), though an attempt is made in explaining it away figuratively to mean 'unfolded' (avyākṛta) according to the subsequently established maxims of the Vedānta. But a question arises: Well, in the TU the word asat may imply avyākṛta as you maintain (see here EU, I. 4. 7: tad dhedaṃ tarhy avyākṛtam āsīt), but how do you ascertain that this meaning is in fact intended by the sage himself? How do you know that he does not want here to mean thereby absolutely non-existent (nirupāḥya asat)? We can only accept that the meaning avyākṛta is your explanation. But this may or may not be intended by the sage himself. There is this doubt that can hardly be removed.

It is well-known that Jaimini and Bādarāyaṇa are the authors of the Mīmāṃsāsūtras and the Brahmasūtras respectively. But there are reasons to think that there were also other authors of the Mīmāṃsa- and the Brahma-sūtras which are different from the extant ones.⁵ For instance, Bādarī, a teacher, is quoted not less than four times both in the present Mīmāṃsā- (III. 1. 3; VI. 1. 27; VIII. 3. 6; IX. 2. 33) and Brahma-sūtras (I. 2. 30; III. 1. 11; IV. 3. 7; IV. 4. 10). (From this it may appear that Bādarī was an author of both the sūtras. But we cannot ascertain only from this that he was actually so. It may be that he had some views on some particular points of ḥarman and Brahman and these are alluded to in those two works by their authors. Jaimini, as the author of the Mīmāṃsāsūtras is known to us all. He is referred to eleven times in the Brahmasūtras on different topics (I. 2. 28, 31, 3. 31, 4. 18; III. 2. 40, 4. 2, 18, 40; IV. 3. 12, 4. 5, 11). Here, too, we may think that Jaimini wrote also Brahmasūtras. But though from only this it is not safe to decide that he really did so, Sureśvara's Nsi (2nd ed. by Hiriyanna), p. 52, shows that it is a fact. Kāśakṛtsna, a teacher, is quoted in BS, I. 4. 22, and his Mīmāṃsā is mentioned not less than three times by Patañjali in his Mahābhāṣya.⁷ This Mīmāṃsā may be both Karmamīmāṃsā and Brahma-mīmāṃsā (i.e., the Mīmāṃsāsūtras and the Brahmasūtras), or either of them, and in this case probably the latter. Bādarāyaṇa in his BS refers also to Ātreya (III. 4. 44), Āśmarathya (I. 2. 29, 4. 20), Kārṣṇājini (III. 1. 9)⁸, and Auḍulomi⁹ (I. 4. 21, III. 4. 45, IV. 4. 6).¹⁰

Then comes a number of teachers, some of whom flourished before and some after the great Śāṅkara. Some of them explained the BS of Bādarāyaṇa, some the Bhagavadgītā, and some an Upaniṣad or Upaniṣads. There were also some who interpreted more than one kind of the above works. This was done either by writing a gloss (ṛtti) or a commentary (bhāṣya). As we are concerned here with the pre-Śāṅkara Vedānta the following teachers who are connected with it may be mentioned in this connexion.

So far as we know the first of all these teachers is Boddhāyana (about the first or second century A.D.). He wrote a lengthy gloss or commentary (vistṛṇa ṛtti) on the BS of Bādarāyaṇa on which is based the Viśiṣṭādvaita system of Rāmānuja, the Mīmāṃsā-sūtras of Jaimini, and the Devatākāṇḍa, in other words, on the whole of the Mīmāṃsāśāstra. This ṛtti is called Kṛtakṛti (Prapañcahṛdaya, TSS, p. 39; Journal of the American Oriental Society, 1911, p. 17).

⁹ The Bhedābheda doctrine of the Nimbarka school owes its existence to him.

Next comes Upaśara. He is credited with the authorship of a ṛtti on both the Mīmāṃsā-sūtras and Brahmasūtras. This ṛtti was, however, in fact a bhāṣya or Mahābhāṣya and consequently he was regarded as a Mahābhāṣyakāra as well as a Ṛttikāra, being the author of the ṛtti.

According to Rāmānuja (Vedārthasaṃgraha, p. 154) and Śrinivāsadaśa (Yatindramata-dīpikā, Poona ed., p. 2) Guhadeva, Kapardika (or Kapardin) and Bhāruci are three ancient Vedānta teachers and authors. The former two, being referred to by Rāmānuja among the śiṣṭas 'wise men', seem to have been in favour of the Viśiṣṭādvaita-vāda. One Bhāruci as an author of a Dharmaśāstra is mentioned in such works as Vijñāneśvara's Mitākṣarā on the Yājñavalkya-smṛti (I. 18, II. 124), and Mādhavācārya's ṭikā on the Parāśara-saṃhitā (II. 2. 3, Bombay Sanskrit series ed., p. 510). It is not known if the Vedāntic Bhāruci is identical with Bhāruci, the writer on the Dharmaśāstra. If it is so, he may be held to have belonged to the first half of the ninth century A. D.

Bhartṛhari's name is found among a host of writers on the Vedānta (Siddhitraya, p. 5). He may be identified with the celebrated author of the Vākyapadīya (600-650 A.D.), the very first kārikā of which points to the Vedāntic doctrine.

With him is mentioned in the same work Bhartṛmitra. According to the Nyāyaratnākara on the Śloṣavārttika (I. 10) he wrote a commentary on the Mīmāṃsāsūtras and made the Mīmāṃsāśāstra atheistic. Whether this Mīmāṃsist Bhartṛmitra and the Vedāntic Bhartṛmitra are one and the same is not known, nor do we know anything of any Vedāntic work that might have been written by the latter.

Brahmanandin (or Brahmānandin) is another teacher. He is known as the Vākyakāra or Chāndogyavākyakāra quoted or referred to by Rāmānuja in his commentary on BS and Madhusūdana Sarasvatī in his ṭikā on the Samkṣepaśārīraṇa (III.218-220). According to Bhāskara on BS, I. 4. 25, Brahmanandin approved the Parināma-vāda, but Madhusūdana Sarasvatī (Op. cit.) is of opinion that it was in fact gradually to lead one to Śuddhādvaita-vāda 'Pure monism' through the Vivarta-vāda or the doctrine maintaining that the appearance of the universe is imposed on Brahman which is the only reality, the phenomenal world being held to be a mere illusion.

After him is Dravidācārya or Dra-miḍācārya (cir. 750 A.D.). He was in favour of the Viśiṣṭādvaita-vāda 'Qualified monism' and as such is mentioned and quoted by Rāmānuja in his commentary on BS. As Madhusūdana Sarasvatī says (Samkṣepaśārīraṇa, III. 218-220), he wrote a bhāṣya on Brahmanandin's vākyas owing to which the latter was called Vākyakāra (Brahmanandi-viracitā- nām vākyānām sūtrarūpāṇām bhāṣyakartā draviḍā-cāryo'pi). It is known from Ānandagiri's ṭikā on Śaṅkara's bhāṣya on the ChU that Dravidā-cārya wrote a vast commentary on the ChU compared with which Śaṅkara's commentary was a smaller one (alpagrantha). He is said to have written a bhāṣya also on the BS.

Brahmadatta was a renowned teacher of the Vedānta. In the Prapañcahṛdaya he is said to have composed a commentary on the BS. Some of his views are alluded to in such works as the Sarvārthasiddhi (II.16), a ṭikā by Veṅkaṭanātha deśika on his Tattvamuktākalāpa; Nsi, I. 67-68; and Śaṅkara's commentary on the BU, I. 4. 7. One of them may be mentioned here and it is this that it is the long bhāvanā 'meditation' of the knowledge arising from the Vedānta-vākya and not the knowledge itself, as holds Śaṅkara, that removes one's illusion. Some informations of him as collected by Hiriyanna will be found in Nsi (2nd ed.), p. xxiii, and the Journal of Oriental Research, Madras, Vol. II, Part I, p. 1 ff. See also Gopinath Kaviraj, Op. cit., p. 13 ff.

Bhartṛprapañca was also a great Vedāntic teacher before Śaṅkara. It is known from the words of Madhusūdana Sarasvatī (Samkṣepaśārīraṇa, I. 7) that Bhartṛprapañca explained the Sūtras of Vyāsa, i.e., Bādarāyaṇa (kāicit tatsūtram vyācakṣāṇair bhartṛprapañcādibhiḥ). Yāmuna-cārya (Op. cit., p. 5) says that he was one of the writers on the Vedānta, and we know from the introductory lines of Ānandagiri's ṭīkā on Śaṅkara's bhāṣya of BU. (p. 2) that while Śaṅkara commented on the Upaniṣad belonging to the Kāṇva recension Bhartṛprapañca wrote his commentary on the text of the Mādhyandina recension, and the former's commentary was bigger than that of the latter. In many cases Ānandagiri in explaining Sureśvara's vārttika on the BU, refers to or quotes from Bhartṛprapañca. Of all the commentators before Śaṅkara, the works of whom could not yet been discovered it is Bhartṛprapañca whose quotations are now mostly available. For the fragments gleaned together from his writings by Hiriyanṇa, see The Indian Antiquary, 1924, pp. 76-86; and Proceedings and Transactions of the Third Oriental Conference, Madras, 1925, pp. 439.

I should like to mention here one teacher more of the pre-Śaṅkara Vedānta. He is Sundarapāṇḍya. He was a great Mīmāṃsist and Vedāntin of South India (8th century A.D.). His three kārikās (gaṇamithyātva^o) are quoted by Śaṅkara in the last portion of his commentary on BS, I. 1. 4. Amalānanda in his Kalpataru (BS, III. 25) quotes his other three kārikās (niḥśrenyārohaṇa-prāpya^o). These last three kārikās together with two more are cited by Kumārila in his Tantravārttika (Benares ed.), pp. 852-853. It seems that these kārikās are from a vārttika of Sundarapāṇḍya that he wrote on some ṛtti or bhāṣya of some unknown author.¹¹

(There were also some teachers who wrote independent works on the Vedānta and of these authors the most distinguished is Gauḍapāda, the author of our Āgamaśāstra which is the most important work, still extant, representing one of the most remarkable phases of the Vedānta.) Here we find the first interpretation of some of the most important śrutis as we shall see later on.

§ 14. The Conspectus of the Contents of the Āgamaśāstra

Now we may give here a conspectus of the contents of our text, and in doing so Book I may conveniently be divided into two parts; part (i) containing kārikās I. 1-18, and part (ii) the remaining kārikās, i.e., I. 19-29. While part (i) discusses what is to be realized, part (ii) is devoted to show its means.

It is well-known that in the Upaniṣads all thoughts centre round the Puruṣa (Ātman = Brahman), 'Self' who is 'all that has been and that will be' (RV, X.90.2: puruṣa evedaṃ sarvaṃ yad bhūtaṃ yac ca bhavyam). He must be known, according to the sages of Upaniṣads, for the fulfilment of the mission of one's life.

¹¹ S. Kuppaswāmī Śāstrī: Journal of Oriental Research, 1927, p. 1 ff.

On the main topic of this section see Gopinath Kaviraj, Op. cit., and P. V. Kane: Proceedings and Transactions of the Fifth Indian Oriental Conference, pp. 937 ff.

But how can he be known properly ? As he is extremely subtle, G a u ḍ a p ā d a leads us gradually from the gross to the subtle, following our common and every-day experience. And in doing so he takes his stand on such Upaniṣads as the BU and ChU, and shows (I. 1-5) that the self, though in reality, only one (eka eva) remains in the body in three forms (tridhā dehe vyavasthitaḥ), in accordance with his three states, jāgrat 'waking', svapna 'dream' and suṣupta 'deep sleep.' When the self is in the waking state he is called Viśva 'all' (because as an embodied one (śārīra) he is known to every man). In the state of dream he is named Taijasa 'brilliant' (because he himself is his light (svayamjyotis) in that condition ; i.e., he does not depend for his light on others for seeing things there, as he does in the waking state in which he is to take light from such things as the sun, the moon, and fire).¹ In the state of deep sleep he is called Prājña 'intelligent' (because he is never dissociated from his intelligence).²

Viśva is the embodied self (śārīra ātman), hence it is metaphorically said that he remains in the front of one's right eye,³ meaning thereby that he may be seen reflected in one's right⁴ eye (or in such things as water or a looking-glass). Taijasa is in the mind, as it is here that a man dreams. Prājña's seat is in the space of one's heart. Again, Viśva has the consciousness of outside, Taijasa of inside, while Prājña has his consciousness compact. These three enjoy or experience the gross, the subtle and bliss⁵ respectively.

² BU, IV. 3. 23 ff. : yad vai tan na paśyati paśyan vai tan na paśyati. nahi draṣṭur dṛṣṭer viparīlopo vidyate 'vināśitvāt. na tu tad dvitīyaṃ asti tato 'nyad vi'bhaktaṃ yat paśyēt.

³ See p. lxxxxviii

In passing the author refers (I. 6-9) to the opinion of the sages that all things have their origin and mentions different theories or purposes of creation. The first theory is this that one creates all as the rays of one's mind (ceto'mśu). This simply means that it is the mind that appears in the form of the external world which has, in fact, no reality. This is the author's own view.

Then he reverts to his main subject, the Self, and says (I-10) that besides his three forms or quarters (pādas) in accordance with the three states, waking, etc., referred to above, there is one form more ; it is his real, natural or innate form. It has no particular appellation as he is beyond all expressions and is designated by the simple word T u r y a (or T u r i y a) 'fourth' as occupying the fourth place in order with the above three. This Turya is above all changes and duality, all-pervading, and when realized removes all miseries

G a u ḍ a p ā d a then shows (II-18) some points of mutual agreement and disagreement of these four forms or quarters (pādas) of the Self, and says that one, if awakened from one's sleep due to illusion

⁵ BU, IV. 3 32 ff.

(māyā), can realize the state of Turya in which there is no duality at all. Duality, i.e., the expansion of the visible world, or the expressions, is mere illusion, and as such it has absolutely no reality. (Here it may be said that as there is no duality, in fact, it does not cease to exist. It is just a knot made and loosened by dint of illusion (māyayaiva kṛto granthir māyayaiva vimocitaḥ).⁶ Nevertheless, we have our common practice with duality, but it is only for our instruction, i.e., it is only by that practice that we can understand and attain to the state of non-duality which is the highest (advaitam paramārthataḥ). Here ends the first part of Book I.

The second part (19-29) demonstrates the means for the realization of that non-duality or Turya. It is nothing but the upāsana 'meditation' (dhyāna) of the Puruṣa (= Ātman = Brahman), 'Self' through the symbol of Pranava or Om.

In Book II G a u ḍ a p ā d a discusses and establishes the unreality (vaitathya) of the external world. For this purpose he begins this Book as Book I basing it on the BU, specially on its IV. 3. 8 ff. He says referring to the sages⁷ of that Upaniṣad that all things in dream are unreal on the following three grounds :

⁶ See the following saying of the Bhagavat (i.e., Buddha), as quoted in MV, p. 540 : ākāśena kṛto granthir ākāśenaiva mocitaḥ.

⁷ G a u ḍ a p ā d a does not employ here or elsewhere (i.e., II.5, cf. IV. 54) such words as ṛṣi or muni (II. 35) as is generally done in similar cases, but he has here the word manīṣin. This word, which is a Vedic one forming a phrase with āhuḥ, is used twice in our work (II. 1, 5) as in KU, I. 3. 4 and BG, XVIII. 3 (with a variation that pra- is prefixed to āhuḥ).

(i) because the things (such as a mountain, or an elephant) seen therein are inside the body ; (ii) because the time being short one does not see the things having gone to those far places where one dreams them ; and (iii) because one on waking is not found in the place where one dreams oneself to be. Having supported this proposition (II. 3) by a reference to the BU, IV. 3. 10, he asserts (II. 4) that the things in the waking state, too, are as unreal as those in dream, because in this state also the things are similarly inside the body, for the mind which appears in the form of different things around us is inside the body. Proceeding the teacher says (II. 5) on the authority of a scripture (BU, IV. 3. 14), supported by reasons, that the two states, dream and waking, are the same on account of the fact that the things experienced in them are of the same kind, there being no difference at all. Here, having offered one reason more in his favour and met an objection of his opponent, he says (II.9-10) that the experiences in waking and dream are equally unreal, both of them being the creation of the mind. Here arises a question (II. 11) : If in both the states the things are unreal, then who is it that cognizes them? Who is it that imagines them? The answer is given (II. 12-15) according to the decision of the Vedānta that it is the Self that imagines himself as the Self through his own illusion, and it is he who cognizes the things. He creates some things in the mind which are not fixed and as such they vanish at once ; and he creates also some other things in the mind which are outside and fixed. There is, however, no difference between these two sorts of creation—the creation of those inside which exists as long as exists the thought (citta), and the creation of those outside, which exists as long as exists the (notion of) the two, i.e., the perceptible (grāhya) and the percipient (grāhaka); both of these two creations are only imagined and there is nothing for their difference. Again, the things which are within and not-manifest, and the things which are without and manifest are all imagined, indeed, the only difference there being that the latter are cognized by different organs of sense. As to the creation of the internal and external things he tells us (II. 16) that first one imagines oneself as a personal Self and then various things, internal and external, following the recollection of one's experience. Of this he says further (II. 17-18) that as in the dark a piece of rope, or a continuous line of water, etc., not determinately known, is imagined to be a snake, so is imagined the Self. Now when the piece of rope is known determinately the things that are imagined there disappear at once,⁸ so is to be known about the ascertainment of the Self (Ātman). It is an illusion of the Self owing to which he is imagined differently by different persons, such as the Breath (prāṇa) by those who know it, or Elements (bhūtas) by those who know them (II. 19-30). But the reality is, concludes (II. 31-34) the teacher, that according to those who are well-versed in the Vedānta, the universe is just like a dream (svapna), or an illusion (māyā), or an imaginary town in the sky (gandharvanagara). The highest truth is that there is neither disappearance nor origination; neither bondage, nor one desirous of emancipation. The universe is not manifold, either through its own nature or through that of others; it is neither different nor non-different. The sages (II. 35-38) who have fully mastered the Vedas have seen the truth that it is the cessation of the universe (prapañcopaśama), which is free from duality. Having known this, therefore, one should meditate on non-duality, and having realized it, one should behave as a fool among the people becoming an ascetic, and realizing the truth inward and outward, should remain unmoved from it.

Book III is devoted to show the non-origination of the universe. The author proposes (III. 2) that nothing originates, and concludes (III. 48) that this is the highest truth. In the course of the discussion he says (III. 5ff) that as the space (ākāśa or mahākāśa), owing to jars (ghaṭas), assumes the forms of the spaces occupied by the jars (ghaṭākāśas), and these forms, when the jars are destroyed, merge into the space, even so springs up the Ātman in the form of Jivas 'individual persons' owing to the conglomerations of the different limbs, etc., and when these conglomerations are destroyed the Jivas merge into the Ātman. If the space occupied by one jar is soiled with dust or smoke, not all the spaces occupied by other jars are soiled therewith, even so (i.e., not affected) are the Jivas with reference to happiness, etc. The forms, functions and names of the jars may be different, but the space is the same. This is the case also with Jivas. As the space of a jar is neither a transformation, nor a part of the space, so is a Jīva neither a transformation nor a part of the Ātman. As the space is never soiled with a dirty thing such as dust and smoke, yet it appears to be so to the ignorant, so appears the Ātman with impurities to those who are not enlightened. In death or birth, in moving forward or backward, he exists in all bodies just like the space. All the conglomerations of limbs, etc., as in dream, are created by the illusion of the Ātman.

Now having shown what the Jīva is according to the Upaniṣads (TA, II. 1-6 and BU, II. 5) G a u ḍ a p ā d a says (III. 13) that the praise of the identity of the Jīva and the Ātman as well as the censure of their difference in the Upaniṣads is reasonable. And so, though their difference is found in some Upaniṣadic texts it is merely attributable with reference to the future state, and certainly it is not in the primary sense (III. 14-16). Indeed in the scriptures the creation is described with various illustrations showing a distinction between the Jīva and the Ātman. But in fact there is no distinction. It is only to lead one to the truth. For, there are three kinds of people, viz., of the lower, the middle, and the higher visions and in order to help them an upāsanā is meant here (by the description of the creation involving some distinction which is mere attributive). Here (III. 17-18) with regard to the view of non-duality which he holds, our author says that it does not conflict with that of the dualists and shows how it does not do so.

G a u ḍ a p ā d a reverts now (III. 19-32) to his main proposition, i.e., non-origination and offers some arguments in favour of it, refuting the views of his opponents. He says that though it is said that it is the unborn that is born, it cannot be maintained. It is true that in the scriptures creation or origination is found both from the existent (bhūta) and the non-existent (abhūta), yet, that which is reasonable is to be accepted. In scriptures origination is said to be through illusion, it is denied there and its cause is negated. Now, origination may be either of the existent (sat) or of the non-existent (asat), but neither of them is possible. That which exists may originate only through illusion and not in reality; because, if it originates in fact, it is to be accepted that the thing which had already been originated originates again. The origination of the non-existent is not reasonable either in reality or through illusion, as in the case of the son of a barren woman.

As in dream so in waking there is only the mind, yet it appears in the form of the duality of the percipient and the perceptible. The duality is perceived by the mind, but when it becomes non-mind, i.e., when its function of thinking (manana) ceases, there is no duality. The author says here (III. 33-36) that the mind which becomes non-mind, and as such is free from the states of dream and deep sleep and has no determination (nirvikalpa), is identical with Brahman.

This state of the suppressed (nigṛhita = niruddha) mind is different from that in the deep sleep, because while in the latter it falls into a condition of stupidity (mūḍha avasthā), it is not so in the former. This is attainable (III. 37-47) through an intense abstract concentration, called Asparśayoga 'contactless concentration,' which, though very difficult, can be realized gradually by the means suggested by the author. When by that process the mind is completely suppressed being free from the states of stupefaction and distraction, not moving at all and having no sense-image whatsoever, it becomes Brahman. And it is said that in this state it rests on itself (svastha), it does not originate and is identical with the knowable which also does not originate. Here the author concludes (III. 48) that there is nothing that originates, and this is the highest truth.

G a u ḍ a p ā d a begins Book IV, unlike the first three ones, with his homage to the 'Greatest of men' and the teacher of the yoga known as Asparśayoga, whom the present writer thinks to be no other than the Buddha (IV. 1-2). Introducing his thesis (IV. 3) he says that there are two classes of disputants, one of them holding that it is the existent (bhūta) that originates while the other says that which originates is the non-existent (abhūta). But the Advayas (= Advaya-vādins), i. e., Buddhists declaring that there is no origination at all maintain that neither the existent nor the non-existent comes into being (IV. 3-4). G a u ḍ a p ā d a who is a Vedāntin subscribes to this last view and says (IV. 5): 'We approve of non-origination declared by them; we do not dispute with them, listen as to how there cannot be any dispute.' He then advances (IV. 6-71) various arguments gathered from Buddhist sources in support of the view attacking and refuting the theory of origination in different ways and arrives at the conclusion that non-origination is the highest truth. In the course of it he shows among others that though it is generally believed that a thing which is not born is born, it cannot be so in reality, for in that case it is to be admitted that nature changes; what is unborn must always remain unborn, it is its nature. Yet, if you say that it takes its birth, then evidently it changes. But what is nature does in no way change (IV. 6-10).

The theory that the cause itself is the effect that is born (as held by the Sāṅkhyas) cannot be maintained (IV. 11-13), nor can there be any reasonable relationship or order between the cause and its effect (IV. 14-21). Again, nothing is produced either from itself or from other than itself; nor is there anything produced that is existent, non-existent, or both existent and non-existent (IV. 22). It is not possible to prove the beginning of a cause or of an effect, and as such neither of them comes into being (IV. 24).

G a u ḍ a p ā d a offers here some reasons in his support from the standpoint of the Vijñānavādins (IV. 25-39) showing that the external things are unreal though they appear to be not unreal; they are, however, false as the experience in dream, being cog-nizable only by mind (cittadṛśya). He tells us again (IV. 40-41) that origination cannot be established, for there is no non-existent arising from the non-existent, nor is there any existent arising from the non-existent; there is no existent arising from the existent, and where is the non-existent arising from the existent?

It is true that the Buddhas have sometimes said of origination, but it is the instruction meant only for those who are afraid of the doctrine of non-origination (IV. 42). As an elephant called by illusion is said to exist only owing to the perception and the common practice, so it is said that a thing exists (IV. 44). He declares (IV. 45-46) that there is only viññāna without the two (i.e., the percipient and the perceptible), it is quiescent and has no origination (aja); it does not move, it is not an object (vastu), yet, it appears to admit movements, it appears to be an object. Thus the mind and the objects have no origination. As a fire-brand being moved appears to be straight or crooked, even so the mind when it moves appears as the percipient and the perceptible (IV. 42). And as the fire-brand when it does not move has no appearance of its being straight or crooked, even so when the mind does not move, it does not appear in the form of the percipient and the perceptible (IV. 48).

We have already seen that causation (hetuphala-bhāva) is not reasonable. The author explains it further in the following few kārikās (IV. 53-56) for his main purpose of establishing non-origination. With the same object in view he refutes (IV. 57) like the Buddhists theories of eternality (śāśvata) and annihilation (uccheda), and says (IV. 58) that it is in the empirical truth (samvṛtisatya) that things are originated, but not in reality. From an illusive seed may come forth an illusive sprout. This sprout is neither eternal, nor has it annihilation. It is to be known with regard to all things. Therefore there is no room for the appellation of 'eternal' and 'non-eternal' of anything (IV. 60). As in dream so in waking it is owing to illusion that the mind which is only one moves having the appearance of the external things. Whatever is experienced in dream is nothing but the mind, similarly whatever we see in the waking state is only the mind. As a creature formed of dream or made of illusion or by some supernatural power takes birth and dies, even so all these creatures exist and do not exist. Therefore there is no Jīva that takes birth, there is no possibility of it. That nothing originates is the highest truth (IV. 61-71). The duality consisting of the subject and the object is only the vibration (spandita) of the mind which has, in fact, no object, and consequently has no relation whatsoever to it (IV. 72-74).

Owing to the persistent belief in what is non-existent (abhūtabhiniveśa) the mind relates itself to its objects, but when their absence is known it turns back from them having no relation at all (niḥsaṅga). Now, when it so turns back and does not move onwards, that position of it is unwavering, it is then free from sorrow, desire and fear. This is the field of the activities of the Buddhas. It shines forth once for all having no origination, nor sleep, nor dream, and is the essence of reality (dharmadhātu, IV. 74-81).

This truth is, however, made obscure by the childish with their different notions; yet, one who can realize it attains the state of omniscience free from duality. And if it is so, what is beyond it that one may desire (IV. 82-85)? The author then shows that it is through the 'supra-mundane' (loḥottara) knowledge by the realization of which one may become omniscient (IV. 86-89). Here he asks us to learn certain things from the Ag r a y ā n a (=Mahāyāna) of the Buddhists giving some of its leading thoughts (IV. 90-95).

As the state of detachment (asaṅgatā) of our mind or knowledge is absolutely necessary, he tells us what it is and how it can be effected. Both the objects and their knowledge have no origination, and as there is no relation whatsoever between them the knowledge is said to be free from attachment (asaṅga). If this state is not achieved, there is no disappearance of the 'cover' or 'obscuration' (āvaraṇa-cyuti) from which we suffer. But in reality there is no cover or obscuration of anything, all the elements of existence being naturally unsullied (IV. 96-98). Concluding, the teacher declares that according to the Buddha the knowledge is not related to its objects, and these two things, i.e., the knowledge and its objects, are not mentioned by the Buddha (IV. 99), for, in fact, he has said absolutely nothing.

§ 15. The Philosophy of Gauḍapāda

Let us now make an attempt to discuss a little the philosophy of G a u ḍ a p ā d a as it is in our text, though it has already been done to some extent in the preceding section, i.e., the Conspectus of the Contents. As some of the philosophical views of our teacher have already been shown incidentally they will not be repeated here. Indeed, much has been written on this by my predecessors, yet when a new annotation is added hereto the subject may be discussed anew according to the light derived from it. In doing so we should keep our minds free from the influence of later thoughts, for it is not always safe to explain an older text by the thoughts in a subsequent work or works.

Now, it goes without saying that our teacher, G a u ḍ a p ā d a, is a Vedāntist and he mainly deals with the Vedānta in the present work declaring its conclusion (II. 12, 31, 35). Naturally, therefore, as a Vedāntist, he treats his subject in accordance with the scriptures (śruti), yet, not without pure reasons. Direct or indirect, his reasonings are in many cases based on scriptures (II. 1-10; III. 24-26). But when there are contradictory scriptures, he says (III. 23) that those which are with reasons (yukti yukta) are to be accepted. Besides, throughout the work he has advanced a number of independent grounds which are very cogent. With a view to removing an apparent contradiction in the scripture he would interpret (III 14) a text in its secondary sense saying expressly that the primary one is not reasonable. The well-known practice of explaining Upaniṣadic texts in their secondary senses among the later commentators of the Brahmasūtras may be seen first here in Gauḍapāda's interpretation.

Among the Vedāntists Gauḍapāda is an Advaitist, the highest truth to him being advaita 'non-duality' (advaitam paramārthataḥ, I. 17; advaitam paramārtho hi, III. 18; advaita yojayet smṛtim, II. 36). He says (II. 31) that according to the Vedānta the universe is like dream or illusion or an imaginary town in the sky (gandharvanagara). There is no duality at all, it is mere illusion (I. 17).

The statement of the duality in the scripture is intended for the instruction (of the ignorant), and so when the truth is understood the duality does not exist (I. 18) and its cessation is bliss (I. 29; see also II. 35). He says (I. 17) further that the duality is due to illusion (māyā). In order to support this view he quotes scriptures (III. 24) which say 'There is no plurality (neha nānāsti kiñcana, BU, IV. 4. 19; KU, IV. 11)'; and 'Indra appears multiform through māyās' (BU, II. 5. 19)'; and he concludes (III. 24) that 'He (Prajāpati) is born variously, though (in fact) he does not take birth (VS, XXX, 19).

Having thus offered the scriptural evidence for maintaining the view that the duality is mere illusion and as such it has no reality, Gauḍapāda gives us some pure reasons. Here, too, first he refers us to a scriptural text (BU, IV. 3. 14) and says (II. 5) that the two states, dream and waking, are the same and one, because of the identity of the nature of the things experienced in them. That the things in dream are unreal is well-known to all and it is said also by the wise (BU, IV. 3. 8 ff.), and can be maintained on the following grounds:

The things (such as mountains) in dream are within as they are enclosed or in an enclosed place (II. 1, IV. 33); but if they are real it is impossible. The time being very short, or there being no fixed rule of time, it cannot be said that the dreamer really goes to the distant land dreamt of by him and sees things there. Nor is he seen there when he awakes (II. 2, IV. 34). Again, when he awakes he does not find his friends and others whom he had then in dream grasped (IV. 35). Further, it is said in our scripture (BU, IV. 3. 10) that in dream there are no chariots, etc., yet, they are seen there. Similarly, in the waking state, too, the things we see around us are unreal on account of the fact that they are within (II. 4; IV. 33). That which is non-existent at the beginning and at the end is so also in the middle, i.e., at the present. Therefore, being like the unreal (such as mirage) the external things appear as not unreal (II. 6; IV. 31). In both the cases, dream and waking, things are only imagined by the mind. That which is imagined by the mind within is regarded as non-existent (asat), while that which is imagined by the mind without is regarded as existent; but the unreality of both of them is reasonable and a matter of experience (II. 9, 10). Whether in dream or waking, whatever is cognizable by the mind is unreal (cittadṛśyam avastukam, IV. 36). Moreover, in both the states the mind though in its own nature is undoubtedly without the two (i.e., the percipient and the perceptible), yet it moves owing to illusion with the appearance of the two (III. 30; IV. 62). This duality comprising the movable and the unmovable is therefore perceptible only by the mind. Hence when the mind becomes non-mind, i.e., when it ceases from its function of thinking, no duality is experienced (III. 31). The cessation of the function of thinking of the mind, or, in other words, the state of non-mind is reached when the mind through its knowledge of the truth of the Ātman does not think anything being non-cognizant owing to the absence of the things to be cognized (III. 32).¹

We have seen above that the waking experience is as unreal as the dream experience both of them being due to māyā or mere imagination of the mind that moves on account of māyā (spandate māyayā manaḥ, III. 29 ; cittaṃ calati māyayā (IV. 61).

That all these external things are the creation of the mind is further said (IV. 72) and described elaborately by G a u ḍ a p ā d a (IV. 47-52) with a very apt illustration of the fire-brand (alāta). A fire-brand, only when it is moved, and not when it is not moved, appears to be straight or crooked, or so. Now these appearances are not produced from anything other than the fire-brand. And when it is at rest they are not in a place other than it, nor do they enter into it. Similarly when the *viñāna*² or mind moves and not when it does not move, it appears in the form of the duality consisting of the percipient and the perceptible. These appearances are produced not from anything other than the viñāna ; and when it is at rest they are not in a place other than it, nor they enter into it. He says again (IV. 63-66) that as animals seen in dream are visible to the mind of the dreamer and do not exist apart from it, and as such they are the mind of the dreamer, even so the animals seen in wakefulness are visible to the mind of the waking one and do not exist apart from it, and as such they are the mind of the waking one.

Clearly this is the Vijñānavāda 'Idealism' before us. Now taking here into consideration the passages quoted under IV. 72 from the LA, and comparing the kārikās IV. 47-52 with the corresponding Buddhist passages quoted in the Annotation under IV. 52, one will be struck with the agreement between a Vedāntist and a Vijñānavādin. One will also be in a position to understand how far Gauḍapāda is here influenced by the Buddhist thoughts and arguments. It is, however, to be noted that Gauḍapāda, though much influenced by the Buddhist thoughts, maintains his position as a Vedāntist. It is true that he advocates the Vijñānavāda, but certainly it is originally adopted by him from the Upaniṣadic source, i.e., BU, IV. 3. 14. on which is based his fundamental statement (II. 5) that the two states, dream and waking, are one. This Upaniṣadic seed of idealism being influenced by its elaborate system in Buddhism and the vast literature on it by the Buddhist teachers who flourished before Gauḍapāda, has developed into what we now find in the Āgamaśāstra. But when there are the above and the similar germs of idealism in the Upaniṣads³ it must be accepted that it did not first originate with the Buddhists, though it has much developed in their system later on.

There are thus two schools of Vijñānavādins, (1) Vedāntists headed by Gauḍapāda and (2) Buddhists with Maitreya at the head. In both the schools the external world is the creation or transformation of the mind. But while in the first the cause for that transformation is māyā (III. 29; IV. 61) it is vāsanā (LA, X. 150)⁴ in the second, both of them being without beginning (anādi). This māyā and vāsanā may, however, be regarded as the same thing. For vāsanā, though explained as pūrva jñāna 'previous knowledge' is conceived as a cosmical force, transcendental illusion (The Conception of Buddhist Nirvāṇa, Leningrad, 1927, p. 209). The real difference then between these two schools in the present case is with regard to the intervention of the Ātman with whom māyā is connected in the first, and his denial⁵ in the second where the vāsanā is with the citta.

Now, the māyā of the Jīva referred to above like vāsanā has no beginning. He sleeps on account of it being himself deluded by it (I. 16; II. 19). He himself imagines himself and various other things through his own māyā, some of them being within while others without (II. 13). These things, i.e., those which are within and exist as long as exists the thought (citta), as well as those which are without and exist as long as remains the notion of the two, are only imagined (II. 14, 15). In the process of the imagination first he imagines himself as a Jīva 'personal soul' then various things, external and internal (II. 16). Consequently as in the dark, a piece of rope not known determinately is imagined to be a snake or a continuous line of water, etc., even so is imagined the self; but when that piece of rope is known determinately the imagined snake, etc., vanish and there is no duality. So is to be known of the ascertainment of the self (II. 17, 18).

But what is the characteristic of a Jīva ? As we have seen above, Gauḍapāda explains it (III.3-9) by an apt illustration of ākāśa 'space' or mahākāśa 'great space' and ghaṭākāśas 'spaces occupied by different jars'. As it is owing to the condition (upādhi) of jars that the ākāśa is regarded as ghaṭākāśas, so it is on account of the conglomerations (of the different parts of the body) that the Ātman is regarded as Jīvas. Consequently as when the jars are destroyed spaces occupied by them are completely merged into the great space (mahākāśa), even so are merged the Jīvas into Ātman when the conglomerations are destroyed. The spaces occupied by all jars are in reality only one; yet if the space occupied by one jar is covered by smoke or dust, etc., not all the spaces occupied by all other jars are connected with it. The case is the same also with the Jīvas in regard to their happiness, etc., i.e., if one Jīva feels happiness or suffers pain, not all the Jīvas are subjected to it. There may be different conditions (upādhis); their forms, functions and names may differ from one another, but as regards the space occupied by them there is no difference. Similar is the case with reference to the Jīvas. Again, the space occupied by a jar is neither a transformation (vikāra), nor a part (avayava) of the space (ākāśa), similarly a Jīva is neither a transformation nor a part of the Ātman. Gauḍapāda says further that the Ātman like the space remains in all the conglomerations or bodies which, too, have no reality as dream being the creation of the illusion of the Ātman (III. 10). The Jīva is the supreme soul of the 'sheaths' (kośas) as described in the TU, II. 1-6, and the supreme Brahman or Ātman is shown in the Madhuvidyā section of the BU, II, 5. That the identity of the Jīva and the Ātman without distinction is praised and their distinction is censured in the scriptures is reasonable (III. 13), for though in some texts their distinction is to be found, those texts are to be taken in their secondary sense, the primary one being not reasonable (III. 14). Here the distinction is made purposely, it is made out of compassion to help one of inferior vision in one's upāsana which is for such a person impossible without some sort of distinction (III. 11-16). It is not that such a distinction must be a real one.

It is said that the mind becomes non-mind and Gauḍapāda is definitely of opinion that Brahman is nothing but the mind that has become non-mind. He says that the mind in the state of suṣupta 'deep sleep' falls into a sleeping state (laya), but it does not do so when it is suppressed (nigṛhīta = niruddha), and indeed that is Brahman above fear and radiant with the light of jñāna (III. 35). See IV. 77-81, and below. He expresses the same thing in other words saying that when the mind is completely suppressed (niruddha) and as such is free from all movements and does not perceive anything else it becomes Brahman (III. 46):

anīganam anābhāsam niṣpannam brahma tat tadā ||

'When the mind is not in the state of sleep, nor is distracted again, and as such has no movement, nor any sense-image, then it becomes Brahman.⁶

It is to be pointed out that here for the first time, so far as goes my information, it is found that Brahman is nothing but the citta which by nirodha is anidra (I. 16; III. 36; IV. 81; = alina = amūḍha), asvapna (I. 16, III. 36; IV. 81; = avikṣipta),⁷ aniṅgana (III. 46; = akṣipta), and anābhāsa (III. 46; = nirābhāsa = nirākāra = arūpa, III. 36). Another appellation of this citta is *sanirvāṇa*⁸ 'with extinction' (III. 37), i.e. in this state it is extinct. It is jñāna 'knowledge' or 'thought' but akalpa (III. 33; = nirvikalpa) 'indeterminate' and consequently asaṅga 'having no attachment or relation to any object' (IV. 72, 96; = niḥsaṅga IV, 79, see IV. 99 = nirviśaya, IV. 72).⁹ Being as such this jñāna is not different from the knowable (jñeyābhinna), which is Brahman (III. 33).

⁶ The first half of the kārikā implies that in this state of the mind, which can be reached by Asparśayoga (III. 39-45; IV. 2) it is free from the conditions known in the Yoga systems as mūḍha 'stupefied' and vikṣipta 'distracted' (V y ā s a on the YS, I. 1). These two are also expressed by our teacher as anidra 'sleepless' and asvapna 'dreamless' respectively (III, 36; I. 16; IV. 81).

⁷ V ā c a s p a t i (YS, I. 1): mūḍham tu tamaḥsamudrekān nidrāvṛttimat. kṣiptād viśiṣṭam. viśeṣo 'sthēma bahulasya kādācitkaḥ sthēmā.

⁸ Here sanirvāṇa mind = amanibhāva (III. 31; MU, VI. 34; YV, III. 67. 81; = amanastā (III. 32; Mukti UP, II. 29) = unmanibhāva (Brahmabindu UP, 4) manahkṣaya (MU, VI. 20) = manorāsa (Mukti UP, II. 10, 35, 36, 39) = manolaya (Nāḍabindu UP, 47) = acittatā (Mukti UP, II. 20) = cittanāśa (Op. cit. II. 32, 34; Śāṇḍilya UP, in One Hundred and Eight Upaniṣads, Nirnayasagar, 1917, p. 358).

⁹ See the Annotation on IV. 72.

It is further said that in this state the mind rests in itself (svastha, III. 47; = ātmasamstha, III. 34).¹⁰

This Brahman of G a u ḍ a p ā d a then points on one side to the state of kaivalya 'the state of being not connected with anything else,'¹¹ or the resting of the Draṣṭṛ or Puruṣa 'Self' in himself (svarūpa, i.e., cinmātra 'pure thought'), as described in YS, I. 3,¹² and on the other to the resting of the citta in the viññaptimātratā of the Yogācāras or Vijñānavādins. According to the latter citta, manas, viññāna and viññapti are synonyms.¹³ Therefore viññaptimātratā is the same as viññānamātratā which means the state of pure and simple viññāna 'intellect' or 'consciousness.' Here in this state there is the highest cessation of the perceiving faculty of the mind.¹⁴ And this is in their opinion mukti 'deliverance.'¹⁵ This is also the 'highest place of Viṣṇu' (KU, I. 3. 9; MU, VI. 26; RV, I. 22. 20; 154. 5 with a slight variation), not only according to the Upaniṣadists,¹⁶ but also to the Vaiṣṇavas (BP, II. 1. 19).¹⁷

One point is to be discussed here. Brahman of the Vedāntists or Ga u ḍ a p ā d a (III. 30) is eternal (nitya), and if it is so, how can it be suggested, as done before, that Brahman and the citta in Vijñaptimātratā are the same, for according to Yogācāras jñāna is not eternal, but momentary (kṣaṇika)? The following is the solution:—

In the authoritative Buddhist works¹⁸ the following words are used for nirvāṇa: dhruva 'enduring', amṛta 'not dying', acyuta 'stable', aṅsara 'imperishable', ajarjara 'not decaying' and *apalokita*¹⁹ 'not broken down.' Certainly these words do not imply momentariness, but on the contrary some kind of stability. Now the citta in the state of vijñaptimātratā is described variously according to the variety of the aspects beginning from the 'Path of Illumination' (darśanamārga) in Vasubandhu's Tk, 29-30.²⁰ It is said there to be lokottara jñāna 'super-mundane knowledge,' āśrayaparāvṛtti (āśrayasya parāvṛtṭih) 'the revolution or change of the recipient', i.e., the 'ālaya-vijñāna,' and anāsrava dhātu 'undefiled element' which is dhruva 'enduring.'²¹ Here by the word āśrayaparāvṛtti referred to above we understand, in brief, that owing to the elimination of the two sorts of evil condition (dauṣṭhulya), viz., the 'covers' or 'obscurations' (āvaraṇas), namely, the knowable (jñeya) and the passions (kṛleṣas), the recipient (āśraya), i.e., ālayavijñāna, turns back to its natural state in the form of advaya jñāna 'the knowledge free from the two,' i.e., the subject and the object. In other words, the ālayavijñāna which was before covered or obscured, the obscurations being now removed, gets its own innate state, i.e., the state of advaya (= lokottara) jñāna. This is called anāsrava dhātu 'undefiled element' which is dhruva.

The third and the first part of the fourth lines are explained there thus: tatas tatra tattvavijñaptimātrasthānān manasas tad api tattvaṃ na khyāti vijñaptimātram. tad akhyānaṃ muktih.

¹⁸ VM, p. 224; SN, IV. 369 ff; Poussin: Nirvāṇa, N.C.V.XXV, pp. 153-4.

¹⁹ Poussin has for it in French (Loc. cit.) with a query "le Soupçonne" ('suspected' or 'surmised'). But as clear from Buddhaghosa on SN, IV. 370 (apalujatāya apalokitaṃ), it is derived from pra-√ruj and not from pra-√luk as may appear. And so it can be said in the words of Yaśomitra (AKV², p. 23) with regard to the derivation of the word loka that rūjir iha gṛhīto na lokiḥ. See my note, A passage of the Abhidharmaśāstra vyākhyā, in IHQ, Vol. II, pp. 418 ff., and Poussin's Rejoinder, p. 656.

²¹ On these words the commentary of Sthiramati may be quoted here:

aparicitatvāt (Tib. hḍras. par. ma. byas. pa. dañ, for anucitatvāt in the printed text) loke samudācārābhāvāt (for which Tib. suggests samudayābhāvāt reading kun. tu. hbyuñ. ba. med. pa. dañ), nirvikalpatvāt ca lokād uttīrṇam iti jñānaṃ lokottaraṃ ca tad iti. āśrayo 'tra sarvabijakam ālayavijñānam, tasya parāvṛtṭir yā dauṣṭhulyavipākadvayavāsanābhāvena parāvṛtṭih. nirdauṣṭhulyatvāt sa tu āśrayavigata ity anāsravaḥ. dhruvo nityatvād akṣayatayā.

But what is the true significance of the word dhruva, that is intended here? Among the 33 descriptive words for nirvāṇa found in SN, IV. 368-373 and 46 synonyms for it in AP. 6-9, we have dhruva and never nitya. It is true that sometimes the words nitya, dhruva and śāśvata are used as synonyms (Pali vevecana = vivacana = paryāya), as says Buddhaghosa himself on SN, I. 142.²² Yet, there is some difference in their meanings. For while śāśvata, according to him, means 'always existing' (sadā vijjamānaṃ) dhruva implies 'enduring' (dhuvam'ti thiraṃ; he writes also on SN, IV. 370: thiraṭṭhena dhuvam).

Jaina teachers, too, are of the same opinion. In connexion with the definition of dravya 'substance'²³ in their system they give the same explanation of the word dhruva or dhrauvya using the same or similar words.²⁴

In the older Upaniṣads Ātman or Brahman is nitya and not dhruva. The word nitya implies that it does not admit of any change, while dhruva does not do so. Let us give here an illustration. If of a lump of gold a number of different ornaments is made one after another, their forms change, yet, through these changes the same gold continues to exist. Owing to this continuance it can be said that gold is here dhruva 'enduring', but not nitya 'eternal'.

²³ Tattvārthādhigamasūtra, V. 29: utpādayayadhrauvayuktaṃ sat.

²⁴ Tattvārtharājavārttika (Sanātana-Jainagranthamālā, 1915), V. 29 (dhruva = sthira); Tattvadīpikā on Pravacanasūtra (ed. A. N. Upadhye, 1935) II. 3 (dhrauvya = avasthiti); Tattvadīpikā on Pañcāstisamayāsāra (Rāyacandra Jainasāstramālā, 2nd ed.), 10: purvottarabhāvocchedotpādayor api svajāter aparitayāgo dhrauvyam; Sanmatitarka (Gujarāta-Purātattva-mandira, Ahmedabad, 1940 V.S.), Gāthā 12, p. 410 (dhrauvya = sthiti).

The Ālayavijñāna is certainly momentary (kṣaṇika), as it changes every moment. It does not therefore move forward as one and the same (ekam abhinnaṃ), but continues in an uninterrupted stream (santati) as the flood with its currents (srotasā oghavat). This continuity has no beginning, nor has it an end (anādinidhana) till nirvāṇa. Now as through all the moments the Ālayavijñāna continues it is dhruva and not nitya.

It may be pointed out here that there is more than one kind of nityatā 'eternity' according to the primary and the secondary senses of the word; viz., (i) kūṭasthanityatā 'eternity as unchangeability' as of Ātman or Brahman of the Vedāntists; (ii) pariṇāmanityatā 'eternity as transformation' as held by the Sāṅkhyas and the Jains. To these two may be added, according to the Buddhists, (iii) one more, viz., santatinityatā 'eternity as continuance.' It may, however, be the same as pariṇāma-nityatā. Where in such cases in Buddhist texts the word nitya is employed it is to be taken in this light.

Now in support of the main problem we are here concerned with, the following couplet may be taken into consideration:

prabhāsvaram idaṃ cittam prakṛtyāgantavo malāḥ |
teṣāṃ apāye sarvārtham taj jyotir avinaśvaram ||²⁵

Mark that citta is said here to be avinaśvara jyotis 'the light that is not liable to be destroyed'.²⁶

It may therefore be safely concluded that G a u ḍ a p ā d a's Brahman and the citta in viññaptimātratā of the Yogācāras are in fact the same thing with the only one difference that while the former is nitya the latter is dhruva.

Let us remember here what G a u ḍ a p ā d a says about Brahman (III. 35-36, 46-47),²⁷ as we have seen just now from the Vedāntic point of view, and compare it with what he says in IV. 76-81²⁸ of the 'field of the activities (viśaya) of the Buddhas' describing

(v) Suzuki writes in his Outlines of Mahāyāna Buddhism, 1907, p. 348 : "Nirvāṇa is sometimes spoken of as possessing four attributes; (1) eternal (nitya), (2) blissful (sukha), (3) self-acting (ātman), and (4) pure (śuci). It is eternal, because it is immaterial; it is blissful, because it is above all sufferings; it is self-acting, because it knows no compulsion; it is pure, because it is not defiled by passion and error."

and approving the views of the Buddhists ; it will then be clear that the same thing has been said by G a u ḍ a p ā d a in two places almost in the same words though from the two different standpoints.

We have already discussed the Viññānavāda as it is in our text. It may be noted here in this connexion that it is treated here by G a u ḍ a p ā d a only with a view to the establishment of the Ajātivāda 'the Theory of Non-origination' which is one of the most important topics of the philosophy of G a u ḍ a p ā d a. Having proposed to show what it is first in III. 2 and then in IV. 5 he declares (III. 48) and affirms (IV. 71) that the highest truth is that nothing originates. For details the reader is referred to the Conspectus of the Contents (pp. cxiii-cxxvi) and the work itself, we should like to point out here only a few important aspects of it.

The subject is dealt with by our author as a Vedāntist separately in two places, Book II and Book IV. In the former he does so purely from the Vedāntic point of view supporting his thesis by scriptures and grounds based on them or in favour of them, some of these grounds being strikingly similar to those offered by the Buddhists for the same purpose ; while in the latter he expresses his approval on behalf of his school regarding ajāli as declared by the Advayas or Buddhists saying that he does not dispute with them on this point and asking his followers or the people at large to listen to him as to how there cannot be any dispute. He proceeds then to show throughout the Book IV the arguments of the Buddhists taking even the actual words from their authoritative works in a number of cases. Readers are here referred to our text with Annotation.

One point may be pointed out here. In Book IV Gauḍapāda has discussed nothing directly of the Vedānta,²⁹ as nothing Vedāntic will be found therein. In explaining the Vedānta in accordance with his own light he establishes the Ajātivāda in Book III, as we have seen above. Then in Book IV he supports that theory referring to the Buddhists who also hold the same view independently of the Vedāntists. Gauḍapāda says here that his school approves of what they say on this point and shows their arguments one by one.

From this it may appear that whatever is said by Gauḍapāda as the opinion of the Buddhists in that Book is 'approved or accepted by him. But can it be said strictly? The Buddhists being the follower of the Middle Path (madhyama pratipad) reject both the extreme views of 'eternity' and 'annihilation' (śāśvata- and uccheda-vādas). This is alluded to in our text in IV. 57-60. But how can Gauḍapāda as a Vedāntist accept it when his Brahman in his own word (III. 33) is eternal (nitya)? Nevertheless, in the present case, Gauḍapāda seems to have accepted the middle theory, for, as the case is put here, there may not be raised any objection. Or it may be that Gauḍapāda has here simply mentioned the views of the Buddhists as he has done it in some other cases in this Book. For instance, see IV. 90.

It is a very striking fact that some of the most remarkable doctrines as discussed and established by Gauḍapāda have not been appreciated in subsequent works on the Vedānta even of the Advaita school; for instance, the peculiar conception of Brahman, the Ajātivāda, the Sarvajñatvavāda (IV. 85, 89) and the Vijñānavāda, besides what Gauḍapāda approves of the views of the Advayavādins or Buddhists in Book IV. Even the great Śaṅkara himself does not appear to subscribe to the above doctrines of our teacher. It need not, however, be said that his Māyāvāda has undoubtedly got strong impetus from the first three Books of the ĀŚ. His Adhyāsavāda as explained by him in his Śārīrakabhāṣya and other works has no mention in the ĀŚ, though a distant relationship may be found out. Here he is undoubtedly influenced by the Buddhist Vijñānavādins specially in explaining their doctrine of Trisvabhāva or Trilakṣaṇa 'three characteristics' (IV. 74, pp. 175 ff).

Of the philosophy of Gauḍapāda there is much more that deserves to be discussed separately, but in order to avoid prolixity readers are referred to the text itself, specially to its Book IV together with the new Annotation of the present writer, in which he has tried to explain many an important and hitherto obscure point of the work. From this, it is hoped, readers will be in a position to form their own judgements as to how much Gauḍapāda is influenced by Buddhist thoughts and how much of them he has adopted into his own system of the Vedānta.³⁰

³⁰ One may consider here the following words in the Bhāvaprakāśa (TM, Vol. II, p. 415) referring to ĀŚ, IV. 11-23 :

Kūranārīyaṇa says here in his ṭīkā: harer atīptasyaiva bhogārtham sṛṣṭir ity anye. Śrīnivāsātīrtha, an annotator of Mādhvācārya's commentary on MāU, clearly says that this view is held by Rāmānuja or his followers (kecid rāmānujāḥ).⁴

nivṛtteḥ sarvaduḥkhānām iśānaḥ prabhur avyayaḥ |
advaitaḥ sarvabhāvānām devas turyo vibhuḥ smṛtaḥ ||

'The Turya 'fourth one'¹ is said to be all-pervading, efficient in removing all miseries, the shining one, changeless, and of all things without a second.'

¹ The other three are already mentioned: Viśva, Taijasa and Prājña.

kāryakāraṇabaddhau tāv iṣyete viśvataijasau |
prājñaḥ kāraṇabaddhas tu dve tu turye na sidhyataḥ ||

'It is held that those two, Viśva and Taijasa, are bound with cause and effect, Prājña is bound with cause, but in Turya neither of them can be asserted.'

Here according to the commentator 'cause' (kāraṇa) is non-grasping of the truth (tattvāgrahaṇa), while 'effect' (kārya) is grasping the truth otherwise (anyathāgrahaṇa). See I. 15. These two are common to both Viśva and Taijasa. In Prājña there is only tattvāgrahaṇa, while in Turya there is neither of them. Cf. PS¹, 31; PS², 34, 35.

nātmānaṁ na parāṁś caiva na satyaṁ nāpi cānṛtam |
prājñaḥ kiñcana saṁvetti¹ turyaḥ sarvadṛk² sadā ||

'Prājña knows nothing—neither himself nor others, neither truth nor falsehood; but Turya is always all-seeing.'¹

As to why Prājña is bound with cause (tattvāgrahaṇa) and Turya is not bound with either of cause and effect (anyathāgrahaṇa) is stated in the following kārikā.

² See IV. 84; Cf. sarvajña, III. 36, 47.

As Prājñā does not know anything he is regarded as bound with the cause (tattvāgrahaṇa) which is just like darkness (tamas).³ As regards Turiya there being nothing except himself he is all-seeing and thus in the absence of all ignorance he is not bound in any way.

³ See US, XVIII, 26.

*dvaitasyāgrahaṇam tulyam ubhayoḥ prājñaturayayoḥ |

'Non-recognition of duality is common to both Prājñā and Turya; but Prājñā is with sleep which is a seed (i.e., cause of specific cognition), while it does not exist in Turya.'

In this kārikā the difference between Prājñā and Turya is shown. In the text nidrā 'sleep' implies tattvāpratibodha 'non-realization of truth' (I. 15), and as it is the cause of specific cognition in dream and waking it is called bīja 'seed'.

*svapnanidrāyutāv ādyau prājñas tv asvapnanidrāyā |
na nidrām naiva ca svapnam turye paśyanti niścītāḥ ||*

'The first two (Viśva and Taijasa) are with sleep and dream,¹ Prājñā is with dreamless sleep, while those who are certain (about the truth) see neither sleep nor dream in Turya.'

It follows, therefore, from the above that Turya is not bound either with cause or with effect.

¹ Dream (svapna) is 'knowing otherwise' (anyathāgrahaṇa) and sleep (nidrā), as said before, is 'non-cognition of truth' (tattvāpratibodha). See I. 15.

*anyathā grhṇataḥ svapno nidrā' tattvam ajānataḥ |

'When the Jiva sleeping on account of illusion¹ which has no beginning is awakened, he realizes (the state of Turya) which is unborn and in which there is neither sleep nor dream,² nor duality.'

¹ The commentator says that this māyā is in the form of tattvāpratibodha and anyathāgrahaṇa.

'False creation (vikalpa)' would cease if it were created¹ by some one. This statement (of vikalpa) is for the sake of instruction. When (the Reality) is known there is no duality.'

It means that if it is held, as we hold, that the vikalpa (= prapañca in the preceding kārikā) 'false creation', i.e., duality, is made by some one it must disappear. We say that it is said so in order to instruct the ignorant or stupid people, so that they may gradually arrive at the truth (ajñānām avabodhārtham.—YV, III. 84.24). This will be clear from YV (III. 84.19-27), from which a few lines are quoted below.

The second half of the kārikā is identical with YV. III. 84.25a and 27b with the single variation that in 26a there is avibodhād for our upadeśād. The reading avibodhād, however, seems to have actually been avabodhād. See the following from YV, III.84:

upadeśāya śāstreṣu jātaḥ śabda'thavārthajaḥ |
pratiyogivyavacchedasaṃkhyālakṣaṇapakṣavān || 19
bhedo dṛśyata evāyaṃ vyavahārān na vāstavaḥ |

² Lit. imagined.

...mādimayī mithyāsaṅkalpakaḥ panā matā |

vivadante hy asaṃbudhāḥ svavikalpavijṃmbhitaiḥ |
upadeśād ayaṃ vādo jñāte dvaitaṃ na vidyate || 27

In a of the kārikā KN reads na nivarteta for vinivarteta. Accordingly it would give the following meaning: vikalpa would not cease if it is created by some one, but the fact is not so, for it is mentioned only for one's instruction. KN, however, explains it differently.

'In the desire of saying that V i ś v a is A and in knowing the measure¹ the common quality 'first' (ādi) as well as 'pervading' (āpti) is quite apparent.'

Ātman is to be meditated through the symbol Om, and for doing so these two must be regarded as identical. This identification of Ātman and Om is described in this and the following two kārikās. In the present kārikā the first part (pāda) of Ātman, viz., V i ś v a, is identified with the first part of measure (mātrā) of Om, viz., the letter A. It is to be noted that Om results from the euphonic combination of the three letters (mātrās), A, U and M. In such identification there must be some common quality (sāmānya dharma) of the things to be meditated as identical.² In the present case there are two common qualities, 'first' (ādi) and 'pervading' (āpti). As Viśva is the first of the four pādas of Ātman, so A is the first of all the letters of which Om is composed. And, again, as the reward of one who understands this identity of Viśva and A is far-reaching (for one attains thereby everything that one may desire), so is far-reaching A, for, as said in the śruti, A is all speech, as it manifests itself in different letters.³

'In understanding that Taijasa is (the letter) U and in knowing the measure,¹ the common quality 'subsequence' (utkarṣa) as well as the state of being in (the middle of) both (ubhayatva) is clearly seen.'

The common qualities required for identification of Taijasa with U are utkarṣa 'subsequence' and ubhayatva which is the same as madhyasthatva 'intermediate position.'

¹ That is, in understanding that the second mātrā of Om, i.e., U, and the second pāda of Ātman, i.e., Taijasa, are identical. See I, 19, note 1. and 21, note 1.

Taijasa is subsequent to Viśva and U is subsequent to A; therefore there is utkarṣa. Taijasa and U both are in the middle being between Viśva and Prājña and A and M respectively.

makārabhāve prājñasya mānasāmānyam utkaṭam |

'In the identity of Prājña with (the letter) M and in understanding the measure the clear common quality is 'measure' (māna) as well as 'disappearance' (laya).'

The commentator's explanation of the kārikā, as I understand it, is as follows: In involution Viśva and Taijasa enter into Prājña, while in evolution they come out of it; and as such they, as it were, are measured with Prājña, just as grains of barley are measured with prastha 'a special standard of measure,' generally a basket made of bamboo or cane of particular capacity. In measuring the grains they are first put into the basket and then they are taken out. Now as Viśva and Taijasa enter into and come out of Prājña, so in pronouncing Om continually, A and U, as it were, merge into and emerge from M. This is the first common quality, called 'measure' (māna) for the identification of Prājña and M. The second common quality, called 'disappearance' (laya) is this: In suṣupti 'profound deep and undisturbed sleep' Viśva and Taijasa disappear in Prājña. Similarly in pronouncing Om, A and U seem to disappear in M.

'One who knows what is equal and common in the three stages and is certain (about it) is a great sage worthy of veneration and praise of all beings.'

akāro nayate viśvam ukāśaś cāpi taijasam |
makāśaś ca punaḥ prājñaṃ nāmātre vidyate gatiḥ ||

'A leads to Viśva, U to Taijasa, and M to Prājña; there is no going to that which has no measure (mātrā).'

This is the consequence of one's meditating upon the symbol Om consisting of three mātrās, A, U and M. The last pāda of the kārikā speaks of the consequence of the meditation on 'the fourth' (Turya). In this state none is led to anywhere, it itself being the cessation of all duality (dvaitasya upaśamaḥ).²

And having understood Om with each of the pādas one should not think of anything else.²

vaitathyaṃ sarvabhāvānāṃ svapna āhur maṇiṣiṇaḥ |
antaḥsthānāt tu bhāvānāṃ saṃvṛtatvena hetunā ||

‘The wise say that all things in a dream are unreal, for they are within owing to the fact that they are enclosed.’

See II. 4, IV. 33.

Things such as mountains, elephants, etc., which are seen in a dream are not outside but inside the body. But as in reality they cannot exist within the body they must be regarded as unreal. Literally the kārikā means that owing to the fact that the things in a dream are enclosed (saṃvṛta) they are inside (antaḥsthāna), and hence they are unreal (vitatha). But it will be evident from kārikā IV. 33 in which this very thought is expressed in almost identical words, that the state of being enclosed (saṃvṛtatva) is not with reference to things (bhūtas), but to the place (pradeśa). This explanation of the author himself may rightly be accepted here and also in kārikā II. 4. See II. 2.

That the things seen in a dream are inside the body is explained in the following kārikā :

adirghatvāc ca kālasya gatvā deśān na paśyati |
pratibuddhaś ca vai sarvas tasmin deśe na vidyate ||

‘The time being not long one does not see the things dreamt) by going to (different) places ; and no person, on waking, is in the place (where he dreamt himself to be).'

It cannot be held that in a dream one goes to different places and sees things in those places, for one may see things in a dream in a very distant land, but the time being short it is impossible to think that the dreamer travels to that distant land and sees the things there. Moreover, it is found that a dreamer, on waking, does not see himself in the country where he dreamt himself to be.

Thus it follows that the things seen in a dream do not exist in the external world.

In support of this view the author refers in the next kārikā to the BU, IV. 3. 10 :

abhāvaś ca rathādīnām śrūyate nyāyapūrvakam । vaitathyaṃ tena vai prāptaṃ svapna āhuḥ prakāśitam ॥

'The non-existence of chariots, etc. (seen in a dream), with the reason therefor, is learnt from the śruti.¹ Therefore, it is

svapnānta uccāvacam iyamāno rūpāṇi devaḥ kurute bahūni । uteva sribhiḥ saha modamāno jagād utevāpi bhayāni paśyan ॥

As regards the nyāya 'reason' referred to here, Puruṣottama writes : svapnānta uccāvacamiyamāna—iti mantreṇānekarūpakaraṇam uktvā tasmān nāyataṃ bodhayed durbhīṣajyaṃ hāsmāi bhavaty anena suptasya nirbandhena jāgaraṇe kaṣṭam āha yady anyatra gato bhavet tatkarāṇam na vaded (?) durbhīṣajyaṃ ca. yatra suptas tatraiva striyā svapne ramamāṇaḥ skhalite jāgrat tām bahiḥ paśyct. yato na paśyati tataḥ karoti. yataḥ karoti tato rathādyabhāvāḥ. evaṃ ca svapne pūrvam rathādyabhāvāḥ paścāt karaṇād ityādīnyāyapūrvakam.

said that the unreality (of things seen) in a dream, as follows (from the foregoing arguments), is evident.'

In the next kārikā the author proceeds to show the unreality of things in the waking state also applying the same reasons :

antaḥsthānāt tu bhedānām tathā jāgarite smṛtam । yathā tatra tathā svapne saṃvṛtatvaṃ na bhidyate¹ ॥

'The same² is declared of the things³ in waking on account

¹ The actual reading of d in all printed texts and MSS. examined is saṃvṛtatva—tena bhidyate which hardly gives any proper sense. The commentary does not help us on this point. It explains : antaḥsthānāt saṃvṛtatvena ca svapnadṛśyānām bhāvānām jāgraddṛśyebhyo bhedaḥ—'on account of being inside as well as of being covered the phenomena in a dream are different from those in waking.' But this explanation is hardly possible, for one naturally expects here to know the non-difference (abheda) and not the difference between the things in waking and in dream. Accordingly one might disjoin the sandhi in jāgraddṛśyebhyo bhedaḥ in the commentary taking the last word as abhedaḥ and not bhedaḥ, though Ānandagiri evidently accepts the latter. Apart from the propriety of that explanation the question is : How should one construe the second half of the kārikā ? What is the nominative of the verb bhidyate ? According to the commentator it must be svapnadṛśya bhāva, but it is not in the text, nor can it be understood or supplied from any of the preceding kārikās.

One may, however, take the line as saṃvṛtatva na bhidyate. In this case the nominative is vaitathya 'unreality' which is to be supplied from the preceding kārikā. The author wants here to show the unreality of the phenomena in the waking state just like that of those in a dream on the same ground, i.e., antaḥsthāna which is due to saṃvṛtatva of the place. Thus it is said that the vaitathya of the things in waking does not differ from that of the things in a dream, for in both the cases saṃvṛtatva is the same, there being no difference whatsoever.

² That is, vaitathya already described in the preceding kārikā.

³ The words bhūta (IV. 33), bhāva (II. 13, 16, 17, 19, 33 ; III. 20, 22), and bheda (II. 4, 5, 11, 12) are the same as regards the meaning. of the fact that they are inside ; for, as there (i.e., in waking) so in a dream the state of being enclosed does not differ.⁴

See II. 1, IV. 33.

I should, however, like to suggest the reading as saṃvṛtatvaṃ na bhidyate which makes the sense very clear.

As to how the state of being enclosed (saṃvṛtatva) does not differ in waking and dream, is discussed and shown in some of the following kārīkās (II. 9, 10, 13, 14, 15 ; III. 29, 30 ; IV. 61, 62, 64-66), where it is fully explained, as the Vijñānāvādins would say, that there being no external thing in reality, whatever we see around us either in waking or in dream is only imagined (kalpita) by mind which is inside our body and inside of a body is covered (saṃvṛta). Says Dīnāga in his Ālambanaparīkṣā, 6 : yad antaḥ jñeyarūpaṃ tad bahirvad avabhāsate.

Puruṣottama writes here: jāgarita iti. bahir anubhavāt katham antaḥsthatvaṃ ity ākāṅkṣyāṃ svapnatulyatvād iti vaktuṃ svapnasyaitattulyaṃ āha yathā tatreti. yathā jāgarite manodhyāto 'rthaḥ śarīrasaṃvṛtatvena bāhyebhyo bhidyata iti śarīrāntaḥsthatvaṃ tathā svapne 'pi pūrvam uktam. atas tattulyatvāt tathety arthaḥ.

Now the author goes to show further in the next kārīkā that there is no difference between the two states, waking and dream ; in fact they are one :

svapnajāgarite sthāne hy ekam āhur mañiṣiṇaḥ |
bhedānāṃ hi samatvena prasiddhenaiva hetunā ||

'The wise say that the two states, dream and waking, are one, on account of the identity of things (in those two states), for the reason that has been well established.'

The first half of the kārīkā refers to BU, IV. 3. 14 :

atho khalv āhur jāgaritadeśa evāsyāiṣa iti yāni hy eva jāgrat paśyati tāni supta iti.

Here eṣaḥ refers to svapna, as says Śaṅkara: eṣaḥ svapnaḥ.

For svapnajāgarite sthāne cf. BU, IV. 3. 9 : dve eva sthāne bhavataḥ.

'The reason that has been well established' (prasiddhenaiva hetunā) refers to antaḥsthāna already explained (II. 1, 4),

Though in fact the objects of waking experience appear as real, still they are unreal. How it may be so the author proceeds to say in the following kārīkās:

ādāv ante ca yan nāsti vartamāne 'pi tat tathā |
vitathaiḥ sadṛśāḥ santo 'vitathā iva lakṣitāḥ ||

See IV. 31.

'That which is non-existent at the beginning, and at the end, is so also at the present (i.e., in the middle); being like the unreal' things still appear as not unreal' ;

For a full discussion see IV. 31, which is identical with the present kārīkā.

¹ That is, being like mirage, etc., which are acknowledged to be unreal by all.

saprayojanatā teṣāṃ svapne 'pi pratipadyate¹ |
tasmād ādyantavattvena mithyaiva khalu te smṛtāḥ ||

¹ The reading of b generally found in editions and MSS. examined is svapne vipratipadyate ; but as the sense requires it should be svapne 'pi prati-

'that the things have some purpose also in dream is known. Hence owing to their having a beginning and an end, indeed, they are regarded as unreal.'

For particulars see IV. 32 which is a repetition of the present kārīkā.

padya which is actually found in a MS., D². in IV. 32 which is identical with the present kārīkā. Here, too, MS. Vn. reads svapne ca prati°. It is supported also by MS. Ch (३) of the Comm. in Ānandāstama ed. which has svapne prati° for svapne viprati°.

apūrvāḥ sthānidharmā hi yathā svarganivāsinām |

'(The phenomena of dream) are strange, like (the characteristics) of the inhabitants of the heaven; they are the characteristics of the person in the place (of dream, i.e., the dreamer himself). Just like one who is well trained here, he goes and sees them (in dream).'

I confess this kārīka is not quite clear to me. I simply write what I have been able to gather from it in the light of the commentator.

It is to be noted that in a I suggest the reading apūrvāḥ sthānidharmāḥ for apūrvam sthānidharmāḥ, so that the former can be connected with tān in c. For other readings see the commentary and the Appendix.

The kārīkā seems to say as follows: The phenomena of dream, on the analogy of which the objects of the waking experience are held to be unreal, are sometimes strange, as the characteristics of some gods, such as the thousand eyes of Indra, and this is the nature of the dreamer (sthānin 'one in the place' of dream) himself. And just as a man who is well trained goes to a place and sees there strange things, so he sees strange things in a dream.

The next two kārīkās seek to establish the unreality of dream and waking experience alike :

svapnavṛttāḥ api tv antaś cetasā kalpitaḥ tv asat |
bahiś cetogṛhītaḥ sad dṛṣṭaḥ vaitathyam etayoḥ ||

'Even in the state of dream that which is imagined by mind within is (regarded as) non-existing (asat), while that which is cognized by mind without is (regarded as) existing (sat); (but) the unreality of (both of) them is a matter of experience.'

jāgradvṛttāḥ api tv antaś cetasā kalpitaḥ tv asat |
bahiś cetogṛhītaḥ sad yuktaḥ vaitathyam etayoḥ ||

'In the waking state also, that which is imagined by mind within is regarded as non-existing (asat), while that which is cognized by mind without is regarded as existing, (sat); the unreality of (both of) them is reasonable.'

Cf. these two kārīkās with IV. 63-66.

The opponent here says that it cannot be said that every thing in the waking experience and dream is unreal, for there must be at least one thing real without which we cannot go on:

ubhayor api vaitathyaṃ bhedaṇāṃ sthānāyor yadi ।
ka etān budhyate bhedaṇ ko vai teṣāṃ vikalpakāḥ ॥

'If in both the states the different things are unreal, well, then who is it that cognizes these things? Who is it that imagines them?'

The answer is given in the following kārikā :

kalpayaty ātmanātmānam ātmā devaḥ svamāyayā ।
sa eva budhyate bhedaṇ iti vedāntaniścayaḥ ॥

'It is the self, the shining one, that imagines the self by the self through its own illusion (māyā), and verily it is that (self) which cognizes the things. This is the conclusion of the Vedānta.'

For such use of the word ātman in the sense of self see BG, II. 55; V. 17; VI. 5, 6.

The word deva here and in similar cases (I. 1; II. 19, 21) does not mean a 'god'. Its literal sense is 'a shining one' and it is used to denote anything that shines in any way, or that which has some sort of glory or power. For instance, in Upaniṣadic texts see PU, II. 1, 2 (where the following are called devas : ākāśa, vāyu, agni, pṛthvī, vāc, manas, caḥṣus and śrotra); 5 (vāyu); 8 (prāṇa); IV. 1, 2, 5, 6 (manas); II (agni, etc.); BU, IV. 3. 13 (Śaṅkara: devo dyotamānaḥ). Puruṣottama would take the word in the sense of 'a playing one' : atra deva iti kṛdāparatvam uktam teneyaṃ kalpanā kṛdāpareti phalaṭi.

It may be noted incidentally that the words prabhu (I. 8, 10; II. 13) and vibhu (I. 1, 10) in such cases are not to be connected with the sense of 'god', they simply mean 'powerful'. See BG, V. 14, 15.

See also our text II. 19; ŚU, IV. 9.

In what manner the Ātman imagines so. is shown in the next kārikā :

vikaroty aparān bhāvān antaś citte 'vyavasthitān । niyatāṃś ca bahiś citta evaṃ kalpayate prabhuḥ ॥¹

'It brings about some things in the mind within, which are not fixed, also some other things in the mind without, which are fixed. Thus brings about the powerful one.'

vikaroti 'brings about' (lit. 'makes variously', Com. nānaḥ karoti)=kalpayati (II. 12) or kalpayate (II. 13, 16; see 14, 30, 33; I. 18, II. 9).

There are two kinds of things, things in dream, and those in wakefulness, and both of them are imagined in mind. The only difference between them is that the former are imagined inside and are not fixed vanishing at once, while the latter are imagined outside and are fixed, for they serve our practical purposes.

The next kārikā seeks to show that in fact there is no difference between them :

¹ In b the commentator with a number of editions and MSS. read vyavasthitān for avyavasthitān which is clearly supported by Puruṣottama. The sense of the kārikā demands in the first half a term opposite to niyata in the second half, and it is avyavasthita (not anīyata) and not vyavasthita. In the phrase bahiścitta evaṃ (in c and d) the commentator takes the first word as bahiścittaḥ. But it must be bahiścitte. Puruṣottama clearly reads the latter. Cf. antaścitte in b.

cittakālās ca ye 'ntas tu dvayakālās ca ye bahiḥ । kalpitā eva te sarve viśeṣo nānyahetukaḥ ॥

'Those which are within and exist as long as exists the thought (citta), and those which are without and exist as long as remains (the notion of) the two (i.e., grāhya 'perceptible' and grāhaka 'percipient'), are all merely imagined. And (in this respect) there is no difference on any other ground.'

For dvaya see III. 29, 30 ; IV. 4, 24, 61, 62, 72, 75, 87.

That in such cases dvaya 'twofold' means grāhya and grāhaka, 'perceptible' and 'percipient' respectively, is quite clear from the words of the author himself (IV. 72b) : grāhya-grāhakavad dvayam. It is also well known throughout the Buddhist literature, for instance, MS, XIV. 28 (p. 94) :

dvayagrāhavisamyuktaṃ lokottaram anuttaram । nirvikalpaṃ malāpetam jñānam sa labhate punaḥ ॥

°dvayagrāhavisamyuktaṃ grāhyagrāhagrāhakagrāhavisamyogāt. Op. cit. XI. 32 (p. 63) :

svadhātuto dvayābhāsāḥ sāvidyākleśavṛttayaḥ । vikalpāḥ sampravartante dvayadravyavivarjitāḥ ॥

°dvayābhāsā iti grāhyagrāhakābhāsāḥ. dvayadravyavivarjitā iti grāhyadravyeṇa grāhakadravyeṇa ca.

See also the following quoted from the Āryaḍḍhāśayapariṣcchā in MV, p. 463 :

na hi kulaputra dvayaprabhāvitā tathāgatadharmatā. tatra dvayākārāvimūḍhātmeti prahīṇagrāhyagrāhakābhīniveśaḥ.

—Pāñjikā.

Though both of the experiences, i.e., the experiences in dream and waking, are mere imaginations, and as such are not different, yet there is some difference between them with regard to the means of their cognition. This is shown in the next kārikā :

avyaktā eva ye 'antas tu sphuṭā eva ca ye bahiḥ । kalpitā eva te sarve viśeṣas tv indriyāntare ॥

'Those which are unmanifest within and those which are manifest without are all imagined indeed, but there is some difference owing to the difference of the organs of sense (with which they are cognized).'

The experiences of dream being related only to the mind (manomātrasambandhāt) are unmanifest (avyakta=asphuṭa); while those of waking being related to external senses, such as eyes, etc. (caḥsurādibhir indriyasambandhāt) are manifest (sphuṭa). Hence it is to be admitted that there is some difference between them. But this difference is not due to any reality (astitva) of external things; for the phenomena of dream, too, appear for the time being to be as real as those of waking. Therefore this difference lies in the fact that while the things within are cognized by mind, those without are cognized by external senses. The following line of Ānandagiri is to be noted here specially: ye manasy antarbhāvanārūpatvād asphuṭā ye ca manaso bahir upalabhyamānāḥ sphuṭā bhavanti te sarve manaḥspandanamātratvena kalpitāḥ. Mark here manaḥspandana and compare the views of the Vijñānavādins which will be more and more evident as we proceed. See IV. 72.

The creation of internal and external things are effected thus:

jīvaṃ kalpayate pūrvaṃ tato bhāvān pṛthagvidhān |
bāhyān ādhyātmikāṃś caiva yathāvidyas tathāsmṛtiḥ ||

'First one' imagines a personal soul (jīva)², and then various things,³ external and internal.⁴ As one knows so one recollects.'

Mark that it is a personal soul (jīva) that is first imagined, and then the other things. And it is so, because the imagination of the latter depends entirely on that of the former. Says the commentator (II. 17) : jīva-kalpanā sarva-kalpanāmūlam 'the imagination of jīva is the root of other imaginations.' This imagination of a personal soul is what is called *satkāyadr̥ṣṭi*⁵ or svakāyadr̥ṣṭi (MK. XXIII. 5), Pali sakkāyadit̥ṭhi, 'theory of individuality' in Buddhism. It is generally known as ātmadr̥ṣṭi, Pali attadit̥ṭhi, or ātmavāda, Pali attavāda. This satkāyadr̥ṣṭi is fourfold : thinking that (i) rūpa (so also vedanā, saṃjñā,

² ātman, sattva, jīva, jantu, puruṣa, puḍgala, etc., are synonyms, MVt¹, § 207; Abhidhānappadīpikā, 93; ŚS, pp. 172, 236; NS, Commentary I. 1.2.

³ Such as prāṇa 'breath,' etc., See II. 19-28.

saṃskāra and vijñāna) is ātman, (ii) ātman has rūpa, (iii) rūpa is in ātman, and (iv) ātman is in rūpa ⁶

This satkāyadr̥ṣṭi is the source of all sorts of miseries in the world and consequently their cessation is effected only by giving it up (MK, XVIII, 2; MV, pp. 346, 361; ŚS, p. 247).

As to how the imagination of all other things is dependent on the satkāyadr̥ṣṭi the following may be quoted from the BAP, pp. 491-92 :

tathā hy ātmānaṃ paśyataḥ saṃskṛteṣu skandhadhātva-

⁶ To mention only a few see DSṇ, pp. 182-183, § 1003; MN, I, 300; SN, III. 16 ff. 42, 44, 46, 56, 102, etc.; MVt², § 208; rūpaṃ ātmā svāmivat, rūpavān ātmā alaṅkāravat, ātmīyaṃ rūpaṃ bhṛtyavat, rūpe ātmā bhājanavat. The following may be quoted here which refutes the above view :

rūpaṃ nātmā rūpavān naiva cātmā
rūpe nātmā rūpaṃ ātmany asac ca |

This is quoted in SS, p. 20; MV, p. 355.

⁷ These stanzas are from PV, II. 217-19. BAP reads tasyātrāha° for tatrāsāyāha°, paritṛṣyan for °tṛṣyan and tu for sa in kārikā 1°, 2° and 2° respectively. The last verse is quoted in AAA, p. 67; NK, p. 279. Cf. the views yāthāvidyas tathāsmṛtiḥ 'as one knows so one recollects' implies here that one's imagination of different things follows the recollection of one's experience.

anīcitā yathā rajjur andhakāre vikalpitā |
sarpadhārādibhir bhāvais tadvad ātmā vikalpitaḥ ||

'As in the dark a rope which is not determinately known is imagined to be a snake or a continuous line of water,' etc., so is imagined the soul (ātman = jīva).'²

² In the commentary on śloka 93 of his Madhyamakālaṅkāra which is now available only in its Tibetan version, Tanjur (Mdo, sa = XXVIII, 52^b. 1—84^b 7; Cordier: III, p. 311), Śāntirakṣita quotes some kārīkās from Books II and III of our work. The following is the Tibetan version of the present kārīkā:

ji. ltar. mun. khuñ. ma. rtogs. te |
thag.pa. sbrul.gyi.rgyun.la.sogs |
dños por.rnam par. brtags pa ltar |
de.bzin bdag. kyañ rnam.par.brtags ||

In a Tib. has andhakārabīle (mun. khuñ) for andhakāre and in b it takes sarpadhārā as sarpasya dhārā (sbrul. gyi. rgyun), and not as sarpa 'snake' and dhārā 'continuous line'.

nīcitāyāṃ yathā rajjvām vikalpo vinivartate |
rajjur eveti cādvaitaṃ tadvad ātmaviniścayaḥ ||

'As the rope being determinately known the thing imagined vanishes and there is non-duality—it is nothing but the rope, so is the ascertainment of ātman'

According to Tib.¹ the reading rajjur eveti in c is rajjur ckaiva (thag. pa. gcig. ñid), and it appears to be better. In d Tib. literally reads ātmāpi nīcitaḥ (bdag. kyañ. ñes pa. yin) for ātmaviniścayaḥ.

ji.ltar. thag.pa.ñes.rtogs.na |
rnam.par.rtog.pa.ldog.hgyur.te |
thag.pa.gcig.ñid.gñis.min.pa |
de.ltar.bdag.kyañ.ñes.pa.yin ||

19

prāṇādibhir anantais tu bhāvair etair vikalpitāḥ |
māyaiṣā tasya devasya yayāyaṃ mohitaḥ svayam ||¹

'It (Ātman) is imagined as Prāṇa 'breath' or 'life' and other innumerable things.² This is an illusion of it, the shining one,³ by which it itself is deluded.'⁴

² See II. 20 ff.

³ See BU, IV. 4. 15: yadaitam anupaśaynty ātmānaṃ devaṃ añjasā.

⁴ The following is the Tib. version:

srog.la.sogs.pa.mthaḥ.yas.paḥi |
dños po.de.dag.rnam.par.brataḥ ||
gañ.gis.de.bdag.ñid.rmoñs |
de.ni.lha.deḥi.sgyu.ma.yin ||

In c the actual reading is dag for bdag and in d, there is rgyu for sgyu. In c there are only six syllables instead of seven. One may, however, add here pa after rmoñs.

It is said that Ātman is imagined as Prāṇa and such other things. But what these things are is stated in the following kārikās (20-28) :

prāṇa iti prāṇavido bhūtānīti ca tadvidaḥ ।
guṇā iti guṇavidas tattvānīti ca tadvidaḥ ॥¹

'Those who know prāṇa 'breath' or 'life' (imagine) it as prāṇa; those who know bhūtas 'elements' as bhūtas ; those who know guṇas 'ingredients' as guṇas, and those who know tattvas 'categories,' as tattvas.'

The knowers of prāṇa are some followers of Upaniṣads; their view is found in the following : MnU, III. 4 : prāṇo hy eṣa yaḥ sarvabhūtair vibhāti; PU. II. 4 : prāṇe sarvaṃ pratiṣṭhitam ; ChU, I. 11. 4-5 ; BU, IV. 4. 18 ; BS, I. 1, 13. Ānandagiri says that they are the votaries of Hiraṇyagarbha, etc., Vaiśeṣikas and others.

The bhūtas 'elements' are nve, viz., earth, water, fire, air and sky (or ether). According to Mādhyamikas and the Sautrāntikas there are only four elements excluding the sky (CŚ, IX. 3, 5). The Vaibhāṣikas, however, admit it as bhūta (AK, 1.8). Ānandagiri says that the view referred to here is held by the Lokāyatikas who maintain that the first four elements are the origin of the world.

srog du. rig.pas.srog.ces.brjod । hbyuñ.po.yin.zes.de.rig.rnams । yon.tan.rig.rnams. yon.tan.sñam ।
yañ.dag.yin. zes. de.rig.rnams ॥

Tib. yañ, dag is generally used for Skt. samyak and sometimes for bhūta and paramārtha; but it is only here in d, so far as I have noticed, that it is employed for tattva.

The guṇas are the three constituent elements of Prakṛti of the Sāṅkhya philosophy, viz., sattva, rajas and tamas.

As regards the tattvas Ānandagiri says that the Śaiva are referred to here, according to whom there are three tattvas viz., ātman, avidyā and Śiva.

pādā iti pādavido viṣayā iti tadvidaḥ ।
lokā iti lokavido devā iti ca tadvidaḥ ॥

'Those who know pādas 'quarters' (imagine it) as pādas; those who know viṣayas 'objects' as viṣayas ; those who know lokaḥ 'worlds' as lokaḥ; and those who know devas 'gods' as devas.'

Pāda may refer to what is known from such passages the following : RV. X. 90. 3 pādo 'sya viśvā bhūtāni triṣṭyaśyāmṛtaṃ divi ; ChU, III. 12.6 : pādo 'sya sarvā bhūtāni. 18. vāk pādaḥ prāṇapādaś cakṣuḥ pādo 'gniḥ pādo vāyuḥ pādāś also IV. 6.3, 8.3. Ā says it alludes to the four pādas of ātman viz., Viśva, Taijasa, etc., described above.

According to Ā the viṣayas are the objects of sense (indriyas). They are five, viz., sound (śabda), the tangible (spṛśa), colour (rūpa), savour (rasa), and odour (gandha). These are to be enjoyed again and again, and as such are regarded as tattva 'principle'. This view is, as Ā tells, held by Vātsyāyana and others (vātsyāyana-prabhāṭya). This Vātsyāyana appears to be the author of the Kāmasāstra. By 'others' we may take the Lokāyatikas and some Tāntrikas, Buddhist and Brāhmanic. See The Basic Concepts of Buddhism, pp. 62 ff.; SS, pp. 37 ff.; Cittaviśuddhiprakaraṇa

Visvabharati, 1933, p. 2. The following is quoted from the last mentioned work :

svādhidaivatayogātmā jagādarthakṛtodyamaḥ । bhuñjāno viṣayān bhogī mucyate na ca lipyate ॥ 17 yathaiva viṣatattvajñō viṣam ālokya bhakṣayan । kevalaṃ mucyate nāsau rogamuktaś ca jāyate ॥

The loṇavids are, according to Ā, the followers of the Purāṇas holding that there are three loṇas 'worlds,' viz., bhū 'earth', bhuvā (bhuvā) 'atmosphere,' and svā 'heaven.'

The devavids are, as says Ā, the followers of the Devatā-kāṇḍa, i.e., that part of the Veda (cf. Nighaṇṭu or Nirukṭa, VII) which deals with devatās 'deities.' They hold that karmaphala 'consequence of action' is given by Devatās, Agni, Indra and others, and not by God.

vedā iti vedavido yajñā iti ca tadvidāḥ । bhokteti ca bhokṭṛvīdo bhojyam iti ca tadvidāḥ ॥

'The knowers of the Vedas (imagine it) as the Vedas, the knowers of yajñas 'sacrifices' as yajñas, the knowers of the bhokṭṛ 'enjoyer' as bhokṭṛ, and those who know bhojya 'enjoyable' as bhojya.'

According to Ā yajñavids are Baudhāyana and others.

The bhokṭṛvīds are the Sāṅkhyas who maintain that ātman is only enjoyer (bhokṭṛ) and not also doer (kṛtṛ). Or see BG, V. 29: bhoktāraṃ yajñatapasām; IX. 24: bhoktā ca prabhur eva ca; XIII. 22: bhartā bhoktā maheśvaraḥ. See also our text, I. 9.

In accordance with the same authority bhojyavids are the cooks (sūpakāras), for in their opinion food (bhojyam vastu) is the principle. Cf. TU, III. 2-1: annaṃ brahmeti vyajānāt; ChU, I. 3. 6: anne hidam sarvaṃ sthitam.

sūkṣma iti sūkṣmavidāḥ sthūla iti ca tadvidāḥ ।
mūrta iti mūrtavido 'mūrta iti ca tadvidāḥ ॥

'Those who know what sūkṣma 'a subtle thing' is (imagine it) as sūkṣma, those who know what sthūla 'a gross thing' is as sthūla, those who know what mūrta 'an embodied thing' is as mūrta, and those who know what amūrta 'non-embodied' is as amūrta.'

Sūkṣmavids are those who hold that the dimension of ātman is like that of an atom (aṇu). Accordingly they would refer to the Vaiṣṇava teachers, such as Rāmāṇuja, Nimbārka, Madhva, and Vallabha. For the discussion see BS, II. 3. 19-32. See also MuU, III. 1: sūkṣmā ca tat sūkṣma taram vibhāti; 9: eṣo 'ṇur ātmā cetasā veditavyaḥ; MU, II. 1: sa vā eṣa sūkṣmo 'grāhyaḥ.

Sthūlavids refer to a class of Lokāyatikas holding that the gross body is ātman.—Ā.

Mūrtaavids are Āgamikas, followers of Āgamas (Saivas and Vaiṣṇavas). mūrtas triśūlādīdhārī maheśvaraś cākṛādīdhārī paramārtho bhavati.—Ā. The following passage (BU, II. 3.) may here be cited: dve vāva brahmaṇo rūpe mūrtaṃ ca mūrtaṃ ca.

Ā says Amūrtaavids are Śūnyavādins. But see the passage quoted above from the BU.

kāla iti kālavido diśa iti ca tadvidāḥ । vādā iti vādavido bhuvanāniti tadvidāḥ ॥

'Those who know kāla 'time' (imagine it) as kāla, those who know diś-es 'directions' or 'quarters' as diś-es, those who know vādas 'discussions' as vādas, and those who know bhuvanas 'worlds' as bhuvanas.'

*Kālavid*s are astronomers. Kāla is the cause of all existence. See AV, XIX. 53, 54; ŚU, I. 2, VI. 1; ŚS with Guṇaratna, pp. 10 ff.

The knowers of diś-es, as says Ā, are *svarodayavid*s, i.e., those who know good or bad omens by voices of birds, etc., holding that the diś-es are the highest reality.

*Vāda*vids are, according to the same authority, those who hold dhātuvāda 'alchemy', mantravāda 'formulas of sacred texts,' or 'the science of magic,' and so on. Here vāda may, however, refer to 'discussion' as in NS, I. 1.1, 2. 1.

The knowers of bhuvanas are those who know the system of the worlds (bhuvanaśośa) and say that there are in all fourteen of them. See ViP, XXXIII-LX (Bhuvanavyūsa and yotiṣpracāra).

mana iti manovido buddhir iti ca tadvidah |

cittam iti cittavido dharmādharmau ca tadvidah ||

'Those who know manas 'mind' (imagine it) as manas, those who know buddhi 'intellect' as buddhi, those who know citta 'thought' or 'consciousness' as citta, and those who know dharma 'duty' and adharma 'non-duty' as dharma and adharma.'

Ā says that a particular section of the Lokāyatikas who opine that manas is the self (ātman) is referred to by the word manovid, and the knowers of buddhi are Buddhists who maintain that the intellect is the self (ātman). The knowers of citta are evidently Yogācāras or Vijñānavādins. The knowers of dharma and adharma are the Mimāṃsists.

pañcaviṃśaka ity eke ṣaḍviṃśa iti cāpare |

ekatriṃśaka ity āhur ananta iti cāpare ||

'Some say it to be consisting of twenty-five, some consisting of twenty-six, some consisting of thirty-one, while others to be endless in number.'

Here pañcaviṃśaka refers to the opinion of the Sāṅkhya according to whom there are twenty-five tattvas 'principles,' viz. 1. prakṛti, 2. mahat, 3. ahaṅkāra, 4-8. five tanmātras, 9. manas, 10-14. five jñānendriyas, 15-19. five ṣaṣṭhendriyas, 20-24. five mahābhūtas, and 25. puruṣa.

By ṣaḍviṃśa we are to understand the view of Pātañjalas and the followers of the Yoga system. Their tattvas are the same as those of the Sāṅkhya enumerated above plus Īśvara, making twenty-sixth.

The word ekatriṃśaka refers to the view held by the Pāsupatas. There are, in fact, thirty-six tattvas, viz., 1. śiva, 2. śakti, 3. sadāśiva, 4. īśvara, 5. *vidyā*¹, 6. puruṣa, 7. māyā, 8. kaśa, 9. niyati, 10. kalā, 11. *avidyā*², 12. *rāga*³, 13. prakṛti or avyākṛta, 14. mahat, 15. ahaṅkāra, 16. manas, 17-21. five jñānendriyas, 22-26. five ṣaṣṭhendriyas, 27-31. five tanmātras, and 32-36. five bhūtas.⁴

As Nos. 8-12 are merely the manifestations (*vibhūti*s) of māyā, as said by the commentator of the MM, p. 50, one may 1 Nos. 1-5 constitute the tattova called pati.

2 This is according to MM, p. 50; but TP, III. 8 clearly reads vidyā and the commentator explains it as asuddhavidyā.

3 Nos. 6-12 constitute the tattova known as pāśu.

4 Nos. 13-36 are included in the tattova named pāśa. See MM, p. 50; TP, II 5-11, III. 4, 12.

excluded these five, thus making the number thirty-one as required in our text.

There is one point to be noted here. According to TP, IV. 2, between avyakta and buddhi or mahat there is an additional tattva called guṇa, but in MM it is not mentioned.

'Those who know *loka*s 'people' (imagine it) as *loka*s, those who know *āśrama*s 'stages of religious life' as *āśrama*s, those who know *liṅga*s 'sexes' as a male, a female, or a eunuch, while others as para 'higher' and apara 'lower'.'

The lokavids or laukikas are those who hold that the pleasing of people (lokānurañjana) is the real thing.—Ā. See II. 21.

The āśramavids are, as says Ā, D a k ṣ a and others. Probably they are the writers on religious laws (*dharmaśāstra*kāras).

Laiṅgas are grammarians, as says Ā.

Here parāpara refers to those who say that two Brahmans are to be known, the higher and the lower. MU, VI. 1 : dve brahmaṇi veditavye paraṃ caivāparaṃ ca.—Ā.

'Those who know sṛṣṭi 'creation' (imagine it) as sṛṣṭi,¹ who know laya 'destruction' as laya, and those who know sthiti 'continued existence' as sthiti.² All (these imaginings) are always here.'³

² The knowers of sṛṣṭi, laya and sthiti are, according to Ā, the Paṇḍita 'knowers of Purāṇas.'

³ It (iha) refers to Ātman.

29

'Whatever thing is presented to him, he sees it; that (ā) becomes it (i.e., the thing presented), and satisfies him. He then, having the strong attachment to it (i.e., to the idea that herein lies the truth) takes possession of him.'

30

etair eṣo pṛthagbhāvaiḥ pṛthag eveti lakṣitaḥ ।
evaṃ yo veda tattvena kalpayet so 'viśaṅkitaḥ ॥

'Verily it (ātman) is considered different through these things that are not different from it. One who knows it in fact, he imagines without any hesitation.'

When one sees a piece of rope as a snake, in fact, there is no difference between these two things, for the snake is not real but the piece of rope which simply appears as a snake. In fact, there is only the piece of rope and not the snake which is merely imposed thereon. In the same way there is only ātman and not things other than that being mere imagined.

The imagination referred to in d of the kārikā is with reference to the practical view of the things. There is no harm to the man in doing so when he knows the truth.

'As dream and illusion are seen, and as is the town of Gandharvas, so is seen all this universe by those who are well-versed in the Vedāntas.'

The word gandharvanagara 'an imaginary town in the sky' ¹ is not pre Buddhist and is frequently used in Buddhist works. The thought, too, of the kārikā has often found expression in them. For instance, SR, IX (p. 29) :

yathaiva gandharvapuraṃ marīcikā, yathaiva māyā supinaṃ yathaiva | svabhāvaśūnyā tu nimittabhāvanā

¹ T i s s e n d a r writes in his Popular Scientific Recreations: The mirage or Fata Morgana is a very curious but sufficiently common phenomenon and in the Asiatic and African plains it is frequently observed. * * * The Fata Morgana and the inverted images of ships at sea are not uncommon on European coasts. Between Sicily and Italy, this effect is seen in the Sea of Riggio with fine effect. Palaces, towers, fertile plains with cattle grazing on them are seen with many other terrestrial objects upon the Sea.—The Palaces of Fairy Morgana, p. 649.

See also 279, 291 (pp. 301, 303).

In showing the Buddhist view Ś a ṇ k a ṛ a quotes the following in his commentary on BS. II. 2, 28 :

svapnamāyāmarīcyudakagandharvanagarādipratyayā vinai bāhyenārthena grāhyagrāhakakārā bhavanti.

The author says in the kārikā that this view is of the Vedāntins. Ś a ṇ k a ṛ a follows it, but R ā m ā n u j a w others is of the opposite opinion saying (B.S., I. 1. 1) : jag apī pāramārthikam eva jñāyate.

The following two kārikās show the conclusion :

32

na nirodho na cotpattir na baddho na ca sādhakah
na mumukṣur na vai mukta ity eṣā paramārthatā ||

'There is no disappearance,' nor origination ; no one bondage, no one who works for success ; no one who desirous of emancipation, no one who is emancipated.—This is the highest truth.'

This is what is the essence of Mahāyāna Buddhism. In the wording of na nirodho na cotpattiḥ cf. the opening kārikā of N ā g ā r j u n a 's MK, p. 3: anirodham anutpādam. See also BA, IX. 150 :

The present kāikā is widely quoted in minor Upaniṣads and other religious and philosophical works of the country sometimes with slight variations. For instance, see Avadhūtopaniṣad, 31; Tripurātāpānyupaniṣad, V. 10; Brahmabīja-upaniṣad, 10.

The reason for what is said above is advanced in the following kārikā:

bhāvair asadbhir evāyam advayena ca kalpitaḥ |
bhāvā apy advayenaiva tasmād advayatā śivā ||

'It is (ātman) imagined in the form of things which are really non-existent through that which is non-dual, and the things (themselves), too, are imagined through what is non-dual. Therefore non-duality is blissful.'

The word advaya 'non-dual' means 'one free from both the perceiver and perceptible (grāhyagrāhakarāhita).'

The imagination of ātman as different things, such as p etc., which have no existence, is through the advaya. The imagination mainly depends on it, just like the imagination of a snake on a piece of rope; no imagination of a snake is possible, if there is no rope. Similarly things are imagined through the advaya, ātman. It is the advaya through which there are both the imaginations, the imagination of ātman as different things, and the imagination of the things themselves. Thus advayatā 'the state of non-duality' being real is blissful.

nānyabhāvena nānedaṃ na svenāpi kathañcana |
na pṛthañ nāpṛthak kiñcid iti tattvavido viduḥ ||

'It (the world) is not manifold either through its own nature or through that of another; there is not either the different or the non-different—the knowers of truth know this.'

Here in the beginning of a I should like to propose to read nānyabhāvena, as I have done, for nātmabhāvena accepted by all, though the former is not supported by any edition or MS. known to me. My reason is this: The words ātmabhāvena (a) and svena (b) are in fact, one and the same in sense; they do not convey any difference in their meanings which is evidently required here. I am afraid, Ś's explanation¹ can hardly be accepted being unwarranted and far-fetched, as it seems to me. Here ātmabhāvena appears to be inexplicable.

Having modified the reading as above, I think the words anyabhāva and sua are actually the same as parabhāva 'nature of other' and svabhāva 'nature of one's own' respectively, as thoroughly attacked, discussed, and finally refuted in MK and MV, XV (svabhāvaparikṣā), pp. 259 ff. Cf. Nāgārjuna's prāṭītyasamutpāda which is (MV, p. 3) anekārtham anānārtham. Candrakīrti comments: ekas cāsāv arthaś caikārtho 'bhinnārthaḥ. na pṛthag ity arthaḥ, nānārtho bhinnārthaḥ. pṛthag ity arthaḥ. See MK, X. 16:

vitarāgabhayakrodhair munibhir vedapāragaiḥ |
nirvikalpo hy ayaṃ dr̥ṣṭaḥ prapañcopaśamo 'dvayaḥ ||

'This cessation of the expansion of the universe, devoid of duality and imagination, is seen by the sages who have reached the other shore of the (ocean of the) Vedas and are free from attachment, fear and anger.'

The word prapañcopaśama is nowhere found in the pre-Buddhist Brahmanic works. It is met with only in later and minor Upaniṣads (NPU, 4. 1; NUU, 1; RUU, 2; for prapañca sū, 6.6; KIU, 17), including the MāU, 7, the existence of which before Ś is doubtful.

The word prapañca of prapañcopaśama is from pra-√pañc or √pañc 'to spread out, make clear, or evident.' With this is connected √pajpañj from which pañjikā 'a commentary' is connected. Rājaśekharā writes in his Kāvyamīmāṃsā, GOS, 1916, p. 100: viśamapadabhañjikā pañjikā; and we read in Hemacandra's Abhidhānacintāmaṇi, II. 168, 170: nirukṭaṃ padabhañjanā pañjikā padabhañjikā. From this it appears that pañjikā is from bhañjikā (from √bhañj; cf. viḥvaṅga from this root in the sense of 'thorough explanation' used in Buddhist Sanskrit and Pali works). But philologically it can hardly be supported.

Let it be as it may, the meaning of prapañca used frequently in subsequent Vedantic works is, according to that system, 'expansion of the universe' or the 'visible world' (prapañcyataḥ prapañcaḥ). But in accordance with the Buddhists it means 'verbal designation,' 'expression,' 'word' (prapañcyate 'nirvāṇa' or prapañcayātīti prapañcaḥ). Thus anything that is expressed by a word or the word itself is prapañca according to the Buddhists. (See The Conception of Buddhist Nirvāṇa, pp. 49, 91, 156, 209.) Candrakīrti writes in his MV, p. 373:

prapañco hi vāk prapañcayaty arthān iti kṛtvā. prapañcaḥ aprapañcitam (MK, XVIII. 9) vāgbhir avyākṛtam ity arthaḥ.

These words (vāc) are naturally various as said in the same work, p. 350. See the passage quoted in our text, I. 17.

prapañcopaśama which is the same as prapañcoparama (MV, p. 11) and prapañcavilaya (discussed by Ś in his commentary on BS, III. 2. 21) is mokṣa of the Vedāntists belonging to the school of Gauḍapāda followed by Ś. and nirvāṇa of the Mādhyamikas, and the object in view of Nāgārjuna in writing his MK as said in MV, p. 4: sarvaprapañcopaśama-śivalakṣaṇaṃ nirvāṇaṃ śāstrasya prayojanaṃ nirdiṣṭam. He himself says (MV, p. 11):

anirōdham anutpādam anucchedam aśāśvatam |
anekārtham anānārtham anāgamam anirgamam ||
yaḥ pratityasamutpādaṃ prapañcopaśamaṃ śivaṃ |
deśayāmāsa sambuddhas taṃ vande vadatāṃ varam ||

For a fuller explanation of prapañcopaśama (and śiva, MāU, 7) from the Buddhist point of view see MK, XXV. 24 with MV, p. 538:

sarvopalambhopaśamaḥ prapañcopaśamaḥ śivaḥ |

iha hi sarveṣāṃ prapañcānāṃ nimittānāṃ ya upaśamo 'pravṛttis tan nirvāṇaṃ. sa eva copaśamaḥ. prakṛtyaivopaśāntatvāc chivaḥ. vācām apravṛtter vā prapañcopaśamaś cittasyāpravṛtyā śivaḥ. kleśaprahāṇena vā prapañcopaśamo niravaśeṣavāsanā-prahāṇena śivaḥ. jñeyānupalabdhyā vā prapañcopaśamo jñānānupalabdhyā śivaḥ.

LA, X. 230 (p. 295):

sarvaprapañcopaśamād bhrānto nābhipravartate
prajñā yāvad vikalpante bhrāntis tāvat pravartate ||

For nirvikalpa see MV, p. 374:

nirvikalpaṃ hi tat (referring to tattva, MK, XVIII. 9). vikalpaś cittapracāraḥ. tadrāhitatvāt tattvaṃ nirvikalpam. yathoktaṃ sūtre. paramārthasatyam katamat. yatra jñānasyāpracāraḥ kaḥ punarvādo 'kṣarāṇām iti. evaṃ nirvikalpam.

It is to be noted that it is vikalpa from which spring up rāga, dveṣa, moha, etc.

The word vedapārāga in the text may be taken here as vedapāra-ga and not veda-pārāga as above meaning 'one conversant with Vedānta (Veda-pāra). Cf. vedānteṣu vicakṣaṇaiḥ (II. 31).

tasmād evaṃ viditvainaṃ advaite yojayet smṛtiṃ |
advaitaṃ samanuprāpya jaḍaval lokam ācaret ||

'Therefore having thus known it (i.e., prapañcopaśama) one should fix one's memory on non-duality, and having realized non-duality should behave as a fool among people.'

The word smṛti, Pali sati, means one of the five balas 'strengths or powers,' or one of the seven requisites for attaining supreme knowledge (bodhyaṅgas, Pali bojjhaṅgas). See DS LXVIII, XLIX; MVT² §§ 38, 39, Cf. ChU, VII. 26. 7 āhāraśuddhau sattvaśuddhiḥ. sattvaśuddhau dhruvā smṛtiḥ. smṛtiḥ lambhe sarvagranthināṃ vipramokṣaḥ. Here Ś explains dhruvā smṛti as continuous absence of forgetting (avicchinna avismaraṇa). This is nothing but dhyāna 'meditation'. Rāmānuja in his commentary on BS, I.1.1 (ed. Nara-simhācārya, Ananda Press, 1909, pp. 9ff.), supports it and Vācaspati-miśra, YS, I. 20, expressly says that smṛti is steady and undisturbed meditation (smṛtir dhyāna anākūlam avikṣiptam). The word smṛti in the present kārikā should be taken in this sense.

For d see Ś on BS, III. 4. 50, where he says: 'Let him be free from guile, pride and so on, not manifesting himself by display of knowledge, learning and virtuousness, just as a child whose sensual powers have not yet developed themselves does not strive to make a display of himself before others (SBE).' He quotes here the following from a work (smṛti):

gūḍhadharmāśrito vidvān ajñātacaritaṃ caret |
andhavaḥ jaḍavac cāpi mūkavac ca mahim caret ||

See Jābala Up, 6; Āśrama Up, 4; Minor Upaniṣads, Ady Library, 1921, Vol. I, pp. 154, 161, 184.

nistutir niramaskāro niḥsvadhākāra eva ca । calācalaniketaś ca yatir yādṛcchiko bhavet ॥

'Giving no praise, paying no homage, nor pronouncing svadhā, with an unfixed home and acting at random, one should become an ascetic.'

The word svadhā (originally svadhā 'self-position,' 'self-power,' 'inherent power') is a Vedic exclamation mostly used in offering food to pitṛs 'deceased ancestors.' It also means the food for pitṛs. In this case svadhākāra would mean 'offering food to pitṛs.'

Calācalaniketa is, in fact, aniketa of BG, XII. 9, and anilaya of BA, VIII. 29, 88, both meaning 'homeless.' Cf. apūrva iva sarvatra in BA, VIII. 16; anagāra 'homeless' or 'a homeless wanderer' in Buddhist literature, and in Jaina works (Aupa-pātikasūtra, ed. Leumann, 1883, §§. 27, 57, etc.).

Here calācala in the compound calācalaniketa is taken by Ś as two words cala- and -acala-, and consequently he has fallen into a great confusion in explaining it. The fact is that calācala is one word meaning cañcala 'intensely moving' i.e., 'absolutely not fixed.' See the Vārtika, 6 ('caricali°') in the Mahābhāṣya on Pāṇini, VI. 1. 12. For example, the following may be quoted: Śiśupālavadha, XVII. 53: calācalair anupadam āhataḥ khuraiḥ; Kirātārjuniya, XI. 30: janmino 'sya sthitiṃ vidyā lakṣmim iva calācalam; Cāṇakyanītidarpaṇa (Bombay, 1867), V. 20: calācale ca saṃsāre dharma eko hi niścalaḥ.

The word yādṛcchika does not imply absolutely unrestrained movements, for that is impossible for such a man. See Ś on BS, III. 4. 28-31, 47-50. Mark the significance of the word yati lit. 'one who strives to restrain one's passions.' The following occurs in the NPU in the Minor Upaniṣads, Ady Vol. I, pp. 147, 153:

nirdvandvo niramaskāro niḥsvadhākāra eva ca.
kasyāpi vandanam akṛtvā na-namaskāro na-svadhākāro svadhākāro na-nindāstutir yādṛcchiko bhavet.

'Having realised the truth inward, having also realised the truth outward, one becomes the truth (itself), deligh therein and being such one should be unmoved from it.

Here ends in the Āgamaśāstra of G a u ḍ a p ā d a Book Two called Unreality.'

The tattva referred to in the kārikā is nothing but prapañ pasama (II. 35) and this is for Vedantists mokṣa and Buddhists nirvāṇa = pratityasamutpāda = śūnya.

The words ādhyātmika and bāhya are two opposite terms and can respectively be translated by 'subjective' and 'objective', or in some cases by 'inward' and 'outward' respectively, ātman meaning 'body' and, according to those who believe in the existence of a separate soul, 'soul' as well. Here bāhyataḥ is an adverb, and so ādhyātmika, too, must be taken as such. Or both of them are to be construed as adjectives.

For the thought and wording of the kārikā see the following couplet quoted as a speech of Bhagavat in MV, p. (Poussin JRAS, 1910, p. 137):

śūnyam ādhyātmikam paśya paśya śūnyam bahirgataṃ ।

BOOK III

upāsanāśrito dharmo jāte brahmaṇi vartate ।

prāḡ utpatter¹ ajaṃ sarvaṃ tenāsau kṛpaṇaḥ smṛtaḥ ॥

'The dharmā 'duty' relating to upāsana 'worship' arises when Brahman is born, but before birth all is unborn; therefore, that (dharmā) is regarded as miserable.'

Ś takes dharmā to signify a worshipper (upāsaka, sādhaka). A simply follows him explaining: dehasya dhāraṇād dharmo jivaḥ.

Upāsana depends upon the duality of an upāsaka 'worshipper' and an upāsya 'one to be worshipped.' This duality also in its turn is possible only when that one Brahman is jāta 'born', i.e., manifests himself in the form of this universe. His jāti or prajāti 'birth' or 'growing forth' or bahubhāva 'becoming many' is often found in the Upaniṣads : TU, II. 6: so 'kāmayata bahu syāṃ prajāyeya; ChU, VI. 2.1-3: tad aikṣata bahu syāṃ prajāyeya, 3.23: seyaṃ devataikṣata hantāham imās tisro devatā anena jivenātmanānupraviśya nāmarūpe vyākaraṇāni. See BS with Ś, I. 1. 2, 5.

Upāsana literally means 'sitting near,' i.e., 'sitting near one who is to be worshipped.' In fact, upāsana, as Ś explains it, is a continuous course of thought (i.e., meditation), not disturbed by any other dissimilar thought upon an object supported by the scripture. So says Ś in his Introduction to ChU, I. 1. 1: upāsanaṃ tu yathāśāstrasamarthitaṃ kiñcid ālambanam upādāya tasmin samānacittavṛttisantānakaraṇaṃ tad-vilakṣaṇapratyayānantaritam. See his Com. PU, 5, and BS, I. 1.11.

'I shall, therefore, so speak of that state of non-miserable in which there is no origination (jāti), and which (on account) is the same throughout, as to show that the things which are (apparently) being born on all sides are none of them born at all.'

The highest truth (paramārtha), according to our author the Mādhyamikas as well, is that there is nothing that comes being (jāyate, III. 48). This ajāti or anutpāda (so frequently used in Buddhist texts) 'non-origination' is the main subject which the author takes up and discusses throughout the remaining portion of his book. See II. 32; III. 20, 38, 48; IV. 5. The word ajāti occurs nine times in the work: III. 2, 4, 5, 19, 21, 29, 42, 43.

The sameness (samatāṃ gata, samatā, sāmya) of things owing to their common quality of non-origination (ajāti). The following is from the Āryasatyadvayavātāra quoted in M. p. 374: paramārthataḥ sarvadharmānutpādasamatayā paramārthataḥ sarvadharmāntājātisamatayā paramārthataḥ sarvadharmāḥ. tat kasmād dhetoḥ. paramārthato nirvāṇaṃ (nānā)karaṇaḥ hi devaputra sarvadharmā atyantānirutpādaḥ upādāya. tad yathāpi nāma devaputra yac ca mṛdabhājanā bhyantaram ākāśaṃ yac ca ratnabhājanasyābhyantaram ākāśadhātur evaiṣaḥ. tat paramārthato na kiñcin nānākaraṇaṃ evam eva devaputra yaḥ [saṃ]kleśa [ḥ sa] paramārthato 'tyantānirutpādatā. yad api vyavadānaṃ tad api paramārthato 'tyantānirutpādatā. saṃsāro 'pi paramārthato 'tyantānirutpādatā. yānirvāṇam api paramārthato 'tyantānirutpādatā. nātra paramārthato nānākaraṇaṃ. tat kasmād dhetoḥ. paramārthato 'tyantānirutpādatvāt sarvadharmāṇām. For b of the kārīkā see III. 38a; IV. 93c-d, 95a, 100b.

In the first kārīkā of this chapter mention of origination (jāti) of Brahman is made. Non-origination (ajāti) is, however, said in the second, and the author promises here to explain it. Now from the following kārīkā he proceeds to do so showing the real sense of origination and non-origination:

ātmā hy ākāśavaj jivair ghaṭākāśair ivoditaḥ ।
ghaṭādivac ca saṅghātair jātāv etan nidaśanam ॥

'Ātman has sprung up in the forms of Jivas 'individual selves,' just like the springing up of the ākāśa¹ 'space' in the form of ghaṭākāśas 'spaces occupied by jars,' the conglomerations (of different limbs, organs of sense, etc.) being like jars and others. This is the illustration of origination.'

It is with ghaṭas that ghaṭākāśas are formed from the mahākāśa. In the same way, it is with the conglomerations that Ātman is born in the form of Jivas.

On the origination of Ātman see BU, II. 1. 20; MuU, II. 1.1; MnU, 1.4; BS, II. 3.17 with Ś's Com.

It is evident from the kārīkā that the origination in both of the cases is not real, but imaginary.

See TJ, VIII. 10, and cf. :

ghaṭasaṃvṛtam ākāśaṃ niyamāne ghaṭe yathā । ghaṭo niyeta nākāśaṃ tathā jīvo nabhopamaḥ ॥

TTU, V. 3.

¹ This is generally called mahākāśa in Vedantic and other works

This is further explained in the following kārīkā :

ghaṭādiṣu pralīneṣu ghaṭākāśādayo yathā ।
ākāśe sampraliyante tadvaj jīvā ihātmani ॥

'As the jars, etc., being destroyed the spaces of jars, etc., are completely merged into space, so are (completely merged) the Jivas into Ātman.'

This kārīkā is quoted by Śāntirakṣita in his commentary on MAK, 93, and it runs as follows in its Tibetan version:

bum.pa.la. sogs. shig.¹ pa.ni । [bum. paḥi. nam. mkhaḥ.la.sogs. pa ।] ji.ltar. nam.mkhaḥ.hdu.hgyur. ba । de.bshin. srog.kyañ. nes.pa.yin ॥

The following kārīkā meets the objection that the Ātman springs up as different Jivas being one, if one jīva feels happiness or suffers pain, all the Jivas should have the same state of mind. But in fact it is not so :

yathaikasmin ghaṭākāśe rajodhūmādibhir yute ।
na sarve saṃprayujyante tadvaj jīvāḥ sukhādibhiḥ ॥

'As one ghaṭākāśa 'space occupied by a jar' being connected with dust, smoke, etc., not all (ghaṭākāśas) are connected with them, so are the jīvas with reference to happiness, etc.'

The kārikā is quoted by Bhavya in his MHK, VIII. 13, the Tibetan version being as follows :

ji.ltar.bum.paḥi.nam.mkhaḥ.gcig । rdul.dañ.du.bas.bsgribs.pa.na । thams.cad.de.bshin.ma.yin.ltar । bde.sogs.de.bshin.bdag.la.min ॥

Literally reconstructed it would read in Sanskrit :

yathāikasmin ghaṭākāśe rajodhūmaiḥ [sam]āvṛte ।
na bhavanti tathā sarve na sukhādi tathātmani ॥

The present kārikā is quoted with the reading na ca sarve prayujyante for c and is attributed to the ViP by Vijñāna-bhikṣu in his comm. on the SāS, I. 152; but it is not to be found there. See Ś's comm. on the VSN, p. 16.

rūpakāryasamākhyāś ca bhidyante tatra tatra vai । ākāśasya na bhedo 'sti tadvaj jiveṣu nirṇayaḥ ॥

'Indeed forms, functions and names differ here and there, but there is no difference of the space ; similar is the conclusion with regard to jīvas.'

There are different things, earthen pots, cloths, etc., their forms, functions, and names all differing from one another, yet the ākāśa intercepted by them is in itself not different in fact. In the same way though jīvas corresponding to ghaṭākāśas, etc., are different, Ātman corresponding to ākāśa or mahākāśa, etc., is not different.

Cf. TJ, VIII. 12 :

ji.ltar.bum.sogs.tha.dad.kyañ । sa.la.tha.dad.hgaḥ.yaṇ.med । de.bshin.lus.ni.tha.dad.kyañ । bdag.la.tha.dad.hgaḥ.yaṇ.med ॥

It may thus be translated into Sanskrit:

tathā deheṣu bhinneṣu na kaścīd bheda ātmani ॥

naivātmanaḥ sadā jīvo vikārāvayavau tathā ॥

'As the ghaṭākāśa is neither a transformation, nor part of the ākāśa, so is always a Jīva neither a transformation nor a limb of Ātman.'

For a and b see Ś on BS, I. 1. 1 : ākāśe bālās talamalinatā adhyasyanti.

This kārikā is quoted by Śāntirakṣita, loc. cit. Tib. version is as follows :

ji.ltar.byis.pa.rnams.la.ni ।

sthitah¹ sarvaśarīreṣu ākāśenāvilakṣaṇaḥ ||

In death and in birth, in moving forward and backward, (Ātman) in all bodies exists just like the space.'

In the origination and destruction of the ghaṭākāśa the mahākāśa is not affected. So is the case with Ātman in regard to death, birth, etc., which are connected only with the bodies. See ChU. VI. II. 3 : jivāpetam vāva kiledam mriyate na jīvo mriyate.

saṅghātāḥ svapnavat sarve ātmamāyāvisarjitāḥ |
ādhikye sarvasāmye vā nopapattir hi vidyate ||

'All conglomerations (of limbs, etc.) are like dream being projected by the illusion of Ātman. As regards their superiority or the equality of all of them there is no ground.'

The saṅghātas, i.e., the bodies, having which the Ātman is born in the form of Jivas, are like the ghaṭas of ghaṭākāśas. These saṅghātas have, however, no real existence, nor is there, therefore, any ground for thinking of their superiority or equality among them.

In discussing what Jīva is the author says further:

rasādayo hi ye kośā vyākhyātās taittiriyake |
teṣām ātmā paro jivaḥ sa-yathā¹ samprakāśitaḥ ||

'The seaths such as consisting of the essence (of food) are described in the Taittirīyaka, i.e., Taittirīya Upaniṣad (I. 6), the supreme soul of them is Jīva, as it is made there clear.

'There are five kośas 'seaths,' viz., annarasamaya simply annamaya, prāṇa°, mano°, viññāna°, and ānanda°, i.e., consisting of the essence of food, breath, mind, understanding and bliss respectively. These are explained in the TU; II, 2. According to the five divisions of kośas Ātman is also divided into five and are called after them, the last of them is ānandamaya, or in accordance with a different authority (see BS, I. 1. 12-19), the one on which rests the last of them is re Ātman. This is referred to in the present kārikā by para ātma. And the author says that this is Jīva.

¹ With some MSS. I read sa-yathā for kham yathā accepted by Ś and found in other MSS. In favour of the second reading compare d of the n kārikā, which is in fact identical. The word sayathā, Pali seyyathā, in the sense of tad yathā, is often used in Brāhmaṇas and Upaniṣads. See PU, IV. VI 5; MuU, III. 2. 8; ŚB, I. 2. 5. 24; 7. 3. 2; BU, II. 1. 20. Cf. in the connexion sa-yadī (= tad yadī), PU, V. 1, and Pali sa-ce for sa-cet (see 72, 1.2) in the same sense (Skt. tac cet).

'In the madhuvidyā (i.e., the Madhubrahmaṇa section of BU, II. 5) in each of the pairs, (such as) the earth and inside (of the body), the supreme Brahman is made manifest as is made manifest the sky (III. 3 ff.).'

BU, II. 5, is called Madhubrahmaṇa owing to the fact of its dealing with a particular Brahmavidyā which is named madhuvidyā or madhujñāna (as in our text) on account of the frequent use of the word madhu which is very important.

in this connexion. Here there are some pairs of things, such as the earth and all beings (pṛthivī and sarvāṇi bhūtāni), and in these pairs it is shown that the person outside the body in the earth, etc., and the person inside the body are identical with Ātman, Brahman. Let the following passage be quoted here (BU, II. 5. 1):

iyam pṛthivī sarveṣāṃ madhu asyai pṛthivyai sarvāṇi bhūtāni madhu. yaś cāyam asyāṃ pṛthivyāṃ tejomayo 'mṛtamayaḥ puruṣo yaś cāyam adhyātnaṃ śārīras tejomayo 'mṛtamayaḥ puruṣo 'yam eva sa yo 'yam ātmedam amṛtam idaṃ brahmedaṃ sarvam.

'This earth is the honey (madhu, the effect) of all beings, and all beings are the honey of this earth. Likewise this bright immortal person in this earth, and the bright immortal person incorporated in the body (both are madhu). He indeed is the same as the self, that immortal, that Brahman, that All.¹

nānātvam nindyate yac ca tad evaṃ hi samāñjasam ।

'That the identity without any distinction of Jīva and Ātman is praised, and that their distinction is censured, this becomes reasonable only on this hypothesis.'

As regards the identity of Jīva and Ātman see ChU, VI. 8.7 (tat tvam asi); BU, I. 4. 10 (ahaṃ brahmāsmi), II. 5. 19 (ayam ātmā brahma); MuU, III. 2. 9 (sa yo ha vai tat paramaṃ brahma veḍa brahmaiva bhavati). As for the difference see BU, I. 4. 2 (dvitīyād vai bhayam bhavati), IV. 4. 19, KU, IV. 10, 11 (mṛtyoḥ sa mṛtyum āpnoti ya iha nāneva paśyati); TU II. 7 (yadā hy evaiṣa etasminn u daram antaraṃ kurūte atha tasya bhayaṃ bhavati).

jīvātmanoḥ pṛthaktvaṃ yat prāg utpatteḥ prakīrtitāṃ । bhaviṣyadvṛttyā gauṇaṃ tan mukhyatvaṃ na hi yujyate ॥

'The difference of Jīva and Ātman before creation, which is declared (in texts¹), is attributive with reference to the future state; its primary sense is certainly not reasonable.'

It is only after creation that there is a distinction between Ātman and Jīva, but before it there is no distinction whatsoever. When there is no production of ghaṭa 'jar,' and consequently no ghaṭākāśa, there is no distinction between mahākāśa and ghaṭākāśa. Yet, one sometimes speaks of this distinction at that time, simply anticipating what is going to happen in the near future, that is, thinking of the imminent production of the ghaṭa.

In his explanation of the kārikā Ś gives an apt example. He says that it is like the use of the following sentence which is very common: odanaṃ pacati. The word odana means 'cooked or boiled rice.' Therefore literally the sentence means 'one cooks cooked rice.' But the rice which was already cooked or boiled does not require to be cooked again. Yet the people say, 'He cooks cooked rice.' Clearly here this use is attributive and has reference to the future state of the unboiled rice. The people assume the future state as present. So is here the statement of difference of Ātman and Jīva.

Ś says that in passages of the Upaniṣads about evolution and dissolution it is the unity of Ātman and Jīva, which is sought to be established. This unity will be demonstrated in the text. First there is shown difference and then unity which is the conclusion. It is, therefore, in view of this future

sa dādihāra pṛthivīm dyām utemāṃ । kasmai devāya haviṣā vidhema ॥ sense or state that the difference is stated. Thus it is only in its secondary, and not in its primary sense.

The author wanted (III. 2) to show that there is no origination (jāti), nor is there anything that comes into being (jāyate). Having done so to some extent he now meets, in the next kārikā, the objection that may be raised against this view, showing thereby also that there is, in fact, no distinction between Ātman and Jīva :

mṛllohavispḥulingādyaiḥ sṛṣṭir yā coditānyathā |
upāyaḥ so 'vatārāya nāsti bhedaḥ kathañcana ||

'The creation which is urged in different manners with the illustrations of earth, metal, sparks, etc., is only a means for an introduction (to the truth). There is in no way any distinction (between Ātman and Jīva).'

For details see IV. 42.

For the creation referred to see ChU, VI. 1. 4-5; BU, II. 1.20, VI. 2. 14; MuU, II. 1-1; MU, VI. 26.

As to how that creation and consequently the distinction between Ātman and Jīva, though unreal, are a means for introducing one to truth is explained in the next kārikā :

āśramās trividhā hinamadhyamotkṛṣṭadṛṣṭayaḥ |
upāsanopadiṣṭeyaṃ tadarthaṃ anukampayā ||

'There are three spiritual stages, viz., of lower vision, of middle vision, and of higher vision; and this upāsanā 'worship' is laid down for them out of kindness.'

In fact there is no distinction between Ātman and Jīva, yet some distinction is attributed there, only to help people in realizing the truth by prescribing different upāsanās according to their respective powers of vision. See III. 1.

The word āśrama in the text is explained by Ś as āśramin 'one with āśrama or religious state of life,' i.e., adhikṛta 'an entitled one.' In all probability the original word was āśraya 'a recipient, a person or thing in which any quality or article is inherent or retained or received,' i.e., an adhikārin or adhikṛta 'an entitled one.' See the use of the word in the following line from MSA, XVI. 69 :

nikṣṭamadyottamavīryam anyad
yānatraye yuktajanāśrayeṇa |
atra āśrayabhedaṇa vīryabhedaṇa nirdiṣṭaḥ.

The author now mentions the opinions of the dualists, such as the Vaiśeṣikas, the Sāṅkhyas, etc., and shows that the decision arrived at by him, i.e., non-distinction (abheda), does not conflict with the views held by them :

svasiddhāntavyavasthāsu dvaitino niścītā dṛḍham |
parasparam virudhyante tair ayaṃ na virudhyate ||

'The dualists are firmly fixed in their own distinctive conclusions and contend with one another, but this (our view) does not conflict with them.'

advaitaṃ paramārthaḥ hi dvaitaṃ tadbheda ucyaṭe |
teṣāṃ ubhayathā dvaitaṃ tenāyaṃ na virudhyate ||

'The supreme reality is non-duality, and duality is said to be of it a particular state or effect of it,¹ while according to them (i.e., dualists) there is duality in both ways.² Therefore it does not conflict.'

So far as mere duality is concerned, it is not that we do not admit it at all, as you do; we do accept it. Hence there is no conflict. Between cause and effect there is, in fact, no difference (kāryakāraṇayor abhedah), the effect being merely a particular state of its cause. So there is no independent existence of the effect apart from that of its cause. In the same way duality is a particular state or effect of non-duality, being an illusion (II. 10). The only difference between us is that according to you duality is in both ways, in reality and also in appearance, while we say that though there is duality, no doubt, it is not in reality, it exists only in appearance.

'As regards creation there are equal sacred texts (statin

See IV. 3.

It says that in reality there is no jāti 'origination' either from the existent or the non-existent, though there are śrutis supporting both the views equally. Therefore the author says that what is reasonable is to be accepted, as certain. And what is reasonable is pointed out in the next kārikā.

According to Śaṅkara bhūtataḥ is paramārthataḥ, and abhūtataḥ māyayā. But in IV. 3 he explains the same words saying bhūtasya vidyamānasya^o, abhūtasya avidyamānasya.

Here for the first time we have the oldest interpretation of the words sambhūti or sambhava and asambhūti or asambhava in IU, 12, 13, 14. which are so differently explained by Ś and others.³ Evidently Gauḍapāda takes here sambhūti (sambhava) in the sense of utpatti or jāti, 'birth,' 'production,' 'origination.' This origination is negated (ajāti) here, and that is one of the main points of the work of Gauḍapāda. For his use of the word sambhava see III. 9, 48; IV. 16, 38.

³ The following may be read with interest. Here the meanings of the words asambhūtiḥ, etc., are given according to Ś and others.

'(The śruti) "This is No, No" denies what is explained. Therefore by the reason of incomprehensibility it is evident that all is unborn.'

The śruti "This is No, No" refers to sa eṣa neti neti ātmāgrhyo na hi grhyate (BU, III. 9. 26; IV. 2. 4, 4. 22, 5. 15) — 'That (Ātman) is (to be described by) No, No. He is incomprehensible, for he cannot be comprehended.' But it appears, as thinks also the commentator himself, it alludes to the following śruti, too: athāta ādeśo neti neti (BU, II. 3. 6) 'Now follows the teaching by No, No.' For it is that śruti which denies both the forms of Brahman, viz., that which has form (mūrta) and that which has not form (amūrta). These two forms have already been described or explained in the text (BU, II. 3. 1).¹ Things are either with or without a form, so when both of them are denied they cannot be comprehended. Thus it becomes evident that there is nothing that may have origination, in other words, all is 'unborn' (aja 'without generation').

Now jāti or origination may be either of the existent (sat) or of the non-existent (asat). But both the cases are impossible. The author shows it in the next kārikā:

sato hi māyayā janma juyate na tu tattvataḥ |
tattvato jāyate yaśya jātaṃ tasya hi jāyate ||

'The birth of that which exists can be reasonable only through illusion, but not in reality. He who holds that one is born in reality has to accept (the position) that what is born had, indeed, been born¹

See IV. 58. See also IV. 13 with its explanation. Cf. CŚ, XI. 10 (260) with the note :

sambhavaḥ kriyate yasya prāk so' stiti na yujyate । sato yadi bhaved janma jātasyāpi bhaved bhavaḥ ॥

asato māyayā janma tattvato naiva yujyate । vandhyāputro na tattvena māyayā vāpi jāyate ।

'The birth of that which does not exist is not reasonable at all through illusion or in reality. The son of a barren woman is not born either through illusion or in reality.'

The author now proceeds to show that the birth of the existent is possible only through māyā as said before (III. 27) :

yathā svapne dvayābhāsaṃ spandate māyayā manaḥ ।
tathā jāgrad dvayābhāsaṃ spandate māyayā manaḥ ॥

'As owing to māyā the mind in dream moves with appearance (or image) of the two (viz., the percipient and the perceptible, or in other words, the subject and the object), so owing to māyā the mind in the waking state¹ moves with the appearance of the two.'

See IV. 61.

30

advayaṃ ca dvayābhāsaṃ manaḥ svapne na saṃśayaḥ advayaṃ ca dvayābhāsaṃ tathā jāgran na saṃśayaḥ

'There is no doubt that in dream the mind which is with a second is with the appearance of the two; so there is no doubt that in the waking state the mind which is with a second is with the appearance of the two.'

See IV. 62.

manodṛśyam idaṃ dvaitaṃ yat kiñcit sacarācaram manaso hy amanibhāve dvaitaṃ naivopalabhyate

'This duality in whatever form, comprising the movable and the unmovable is perceived by the mind, but when the mind becomes non-mind (i.e., when it loses its own function of thinking, manana) duality is not experienced.

See IV. 47, 48, 72. It means that the appearance of duality is nothing but the vibration of the mind (citta- or vijñāna-spandan) and when this vibration is stopped there is no duality at all.

When the state of non-mind is reached is said in the following kārikā :

ātmasyānubodhena na saṅkalpayate yadā । amanastāṃ tadā yāti grāhyābhāve tadagrahāt ॥

'When by the knowledge of the truth of ātman the mind ceases from imagining it goes to the state of non-mind (non-cognizant in the absence of the things to be cognized).

See IV. 72, 79, 99.

Mark here that d (grāhyābhāve tadagrahāt) is identical with that of Tk, 28. See Vis, p. 584 ; LA, p. 169 ; and the note on III. of our text.

The next kārikā says that the mind which becomes non-mind 38 as described above, is, in fact, identical with Brahman :

akalpakaṃ ajaṃ jñānaṃ jñeyābhinnaṃ pracakṣate । brahma jñeyam ajaṃ nityam ajenājaṃ vibudhyate ॥

'The jñāna that does not imagine (i.e., indeterminate) and is (consequently) unborn is, they say, not different from the knowable. The knowable is Brahman, the unborn and eternal one. So the unborn (Brahman) becomes manifest through the unborn (jñāna).'

Here jñāna which the commentator explains as jñaptimātra is in reality vijñāna or citta 'mind' as spoken of above. See Vk, p. 3 : cittaṃ mano vijñānaṃ vijñaptis ceti paryāyāḥ ; MV, XVII. 1 (p. 308) : cittaṃ mano 'tha vijñānam iti tasyaiva (=cittasyaiva) paryāyāḥ ; AK, II. 34 : cittaṃ mano 'tha vijñānam ekārtham ; DN, I. 121 ; SN, II. 94. See III. 38, IV. 96.

For ajaṃ vibudhyate cf. I. 16 : advaitaṃ budhyate tadā ; III. 26 : ajaṃ prakāśate. For the whole thought see III. 35, 46. ajenājaṃ vibudhyate = ajena jñānena (=cittena) ajaṃ jñeyam (Brahman) vibudhyate prakāśate. The unborn knowable Brahman is manifest through the unborn knowledge (i.e., the mind when it ceases from its function), there being no difference between them. See III, 46, 47.

akalpaka = nirvikalpa (III. 34) = asaṅga (IV. 72). See LA, p. 157 : asaṅgalakṣaṇam jñānam.

For jñeyābhinna 'not different from the knowable' see IV. 1.

The author now goes to speak about the state of the mind described above :

34 nigṛhītasya manaso nirvikalpasya dhīmataḥ । pracāraḥ sa tu vijñeyaḥ suṣupte 'nyo na tatsamaḥ ॥

'That state (pracāra) of the mind of a wise man which suppressed and (thus) indeterminate is to be known ; (the state of the mind) in deep sleep is different from that, it is not like that.'

It is said here that the state of the suppressed and indeterminate mind is different from that in suṣupti. Why it is so is stated in the following kārikā (III. 35).

The word pracāra which is the same as vihāra or bhūti as the yogins and the Buddhists would express, means in some cases avasthā 'state.' Our author uses (IV. 80) for it the word viśaya.

By nirvikalpa manas 'indeterminate mind' we are to understand that it recognises no such distinction as that between subject and object, etc.

In Buddhist works dhīmat is a synonym for Bodhisattva (MSA, XIX. 73).

The reason for what is said above is now offered as follows :

35

liyate hi suṣupte tan nigṛhītaṃ na liyate । tad eva nirbhayaṃ brahma jñānālokaṃ samantataḥ ॥

'For in deep sleep it (manas) falls into a state of oblivion but it does not do so when suppressed. Indeed, the ¹ Or, into a sleeping state, laya, see III. 41, 42.

Brahman, free from fear and radiant as *jñāna*² on all sides.'

It is clear here that the mind when suppressed, i.e., ceases from all of its activities, becomes Brahman. See III. 46.

Cf. the following quoted by Jayaratha in his commentary on śloka 30 of TA (Vol. III, p. 23) presenting the views of the Vijñānavādins :

prabhāsvaram idaṃ cittaṃ prakṛtyāgantavo malāḥ |
teṣāṃ apāye sarvārthaṃ taj jyotir avinaśvaram ||

² On jñānāloka Śaṅkara writes: jñaptir jñānam ātmasvabhāvavacaitanyaṃ tad eva jñānam ālokaḥ prakāśo yasya tad brahma jñānālokaḥ. For āloka see vibhāta III. 36, IV. 81, and jyotis (III. 37).

Brahman referred to above is now further described in the following kārikā :

ajam anidram asvapnam¹ anāmakam arūpakam |
sakṛdvibhataṃ² sarvajñaṃ³ nopacāraḥ kathañcana ||

'It is unborn, and has no sleep, nor dream ; nor has it name and form ; it is illumined once for all, and is all-knowing. And in no way is there access-concentration (upacāra).'

The state, i.e., the state of becoming Brahman as stated above, is, in fact, the state of samādhi 'intense abstract meditation,' as we shall see presently in the following two kārikās.

See I. 16^a ; IV. 81^a.

² See III. 37^a ; IV. 81^a with the note ; ChU, VIII. 4. 1-2: sakṛd vibhāto hy eṣa brahmalokaḥ.

³ III. 47.

Now, there are two kinds or stages of samādhi, upacāra samādhi and arpanā^o (Pali appanā). In the first the mind is concentrated on its object, but not uninterruptedly, for it is so and the next moment it is not so: simply moving (upacarati) the object just like a bee sitting gently inside a flower in search of its honey. In the second, the mind is firmly and uninterruptedly fixed on the object. Because this state of samādhi 'gives (arpayati)' the one-pointed mind to the object, it is called arpanā, as Buddhaghosa explains in his Visuddhi p. 142 : ekaggaṃ cittaṃ ārammaṇe appetiti appanā. Cf. p. 143 : upagantvā vicāraṇavasena upavicāro. Cf. also vicāra explained in the Vibhāvanī Tikā on the AAS, I. 17 :

santavutti vicāro cittassa nātipphandabhūto ākāse uppatto sakuṇassa pakkhapasāraṇaṃ viya, padumassa upariḥ paribbhamaṇaṃ viya ca padumābhimukhapatitassa bhamarā duvidho hi samādhi upacārasamādhi ca appanāsamādhi ca. dvih'ākārehi cittaṃ samādhīyati upacārabhūmiyaṃ (= upacāra) vatthāyaṃ—Tikā) vā parilābhabhūmiyaṃ (= jhāna) adhiṣṭhāyaṃ—Tikā).° dvinnāṃ pana samādhīnaṃ idaṃ upacāraṇaṃ°. yathā nāma daharo kumārako ukkhipitvā phalaṃ māno punappunaṃ bhūmiyaṃ patati evaṃ eva upacāre upacāraṇaṃ cittaṃ kālena nimittaṃ ārammaṇaṃ karoti kālena bhavaṃ upacāraṇaṃ otarati.° yathā nāma balavā puriso āsanā vuṭṭhāya divasaṃ tiṭṭheyya evaṃ eva appanāsamādhimhi uppanne cittaṃ bhavaṃ gavāṃ chinditvā kevalam'pi rattiṃ kevalam'pi divasaṃ tiṭṭhati.

The d of the kārikā may be explained in another way. Brahman is described here by such words as aja, anidra, asvapna, but being beyond speech and mind it cannot be done so. Hence it is said : nopacāraḥ kathañcana '(But) in no way there is access-concentration (or metaphorical) expression (upacāra). See BSB, p.

sa punaḥ pāramāthikāḥ svabhāvaḥ sarvadharmāṇām nirvikalpasyaiva jñānasya gocaro veditavyaḥ. sacet punar yathaivābhilāpo yeṣu dharmeṣu yasmin vastuni pravartate tadātmakās te dharmās tad vastu syāt. evam sati bahuvīdhā bahavaḥ svabhāvā ekasyaikasya vastuno bhavyeṣu. tat kasya hetoḥ. tathāhy ekasmin dharma ekasmin vastuni bahuvīdhā bahavo bahubhir abhilāpaiḥ prajñāptaya upacārāḥ kriyante.^o

The following two kārīkās say that this state of becoming Brahman is samādhi :

37

sarvābhilāpavigataḥ sarvacintāsamutthitaḥ |
suprasāntaḥ sakrījyotiḥ samādhir acalo 'bhayaḥ ||

'It is intense abstract concentration (samādhi) which is beyond all expression,¹ and above all thoughts,² very calm and full of light burning once for all,³ unwavering and without fear.'

² III. 38^b : cintā yatra na vidyate.

³ III. 36^a, IV. 81 with note.

38

grāho na tatra notsargaś cintā yatra na vidyate |
ātmasaṁsthaṁ tadā jñānam ajāti samatāṁ gataṁ ||

'Where there is no thought¹ there is neither apprehension or abandonment (of any object). At that time the mind

(jñāna = citta)² rests in itself, is unborn and attains to the state of sameness.³

In this state the mind does not apprehend or abandon any of its objects and as such rests in itself (ātmasaṁstha).

The word ātman in ātmasaṁstha here means 'itself' (svatman) and not 'soul' (paramātman or Brahman) as distinct from the mind (jñāna). Cf. BG, VI. 25 : ātmasaṁsthaṁ manah kṛtvā na kiñcid api cintayet 'having made the mind resting in itself one should not think of anything.' Nīlakaṇṭha writes here in his ṭīkā on the word ātmasaṁstha : ātmani svarasāṁstha sthitir yasya.

This ātmasaṁstha jñāna is, in fact, in other words vijñāptimātra or vijñānamātra of the Buddhist Vijñānavād. The word vijñānamātra means 'simply vijñāna,' and the state of being so is vijñānamātratā. When the vijñāna does not apprehend any object whatsoever and as such rests only in itself this state is called vijñānamātratā. Says Vasubandhu (Tk. 28, ViS, p. 584) :

yadā tv ālambanaṁ jñānaṁ naivopalabhate tadā |
sthitam vijñānamātratve grāhyābhāve tadagrahāt ||

LA, p. 169 :

yadā tv ālambyam arthaṁ nopalabhate jñānaṁ vijñāptimātravyavasthānaṁ bhavati. vijñāpter grāhyābhāvaḥ grāhakasyābhāvaḥ. tadagrahaṇān na pravartate jñānaṁ.

This is referred to in the following stanza of the KU, II. 3

yadā pañcāvatiṣṭhante jñānāni manasā saha |
buddhiś ca na viceṣṭate tām āhuḥ paramāṁ gatim ||

² See III. 32, IV. 96, with notes.

³ See III. 2; IV. 77, 80, 93, 95, 100. It is to be noted in these kārīkās ajāti or anutpatti and sama, or sāmya or samatā are always used together. Cf. this with the quotation of MV in the note on III. 2

In the Upaniṣads it is well-known that Brahman is viññāna (BU, III. 9. 28; TU, II. 5. 1, III. 5. 1., etc., viññānamaya = viññāna) or jñāna (TU, II. 11). This viññāna or jñāna is ātmasamsthā jñāna or viññānamātra.

For ātmasamsthā jñāna see ChU, VII. 24. 1-2:

“Where one sees nothing else, hears nothing else, understands nothing else, that is the Infinite (bhūman).

‘Sir, in what does the Infinite rest?’

‘In its own greatness,—or not even greatness.’”⁴

It is to be noted that in the beginning of the present chapter (III. 2) the author proposed ‘ato vakṣyāmy akārpaṇyam ajāti samatāṃ gataṃ,’ here in the present kārikā he concludes the subject.

⁴ See my paper Evolution of Viññānavāda in IHQ, X, 1934, pp. 1 ff.

That samādhi which is nirvikalpa is further described in the next kārikā:

asparśayogo nāmaiṣa durdarśaḥ sarvayogibhiḥ |
yogino bibhyati hy asmād abhaye bhayadarśinaḥ ||

‘This is what is called ‘contactless concentration’ (asparśa-yoga), very difficult to be realized by all yogins; the yogins shrink from it seeing fear where (in fact) there is no fear.’

For asparśayoga see IV. 2.

The Commentator explains the second half of the kārikā saying that though there is no fear in this yoga yogins (of lower order) are afraid of it thinking it to be one’s own destruction (ātmanāśarūpa). These people have no discrimination (aviveka) and so they have fear though there is no fear.

Vidyāraṇya quotes this kārikā in his PD, II. 29, introducing it (II. 28) thus:

gauḍācāryā nirvikalpe samādhāv anyayoginām |
sākārabrahmaniṣṭhānām atyantam bhayam ūcire ||

Now the author proceeds to say that for the yoga referred to the control of mind is absolutely necessary, on which depends the absence of fear, and such other things:

40

manaso nigrahāyattam abhayaṃ sarvayogiṇām |
duḥkhakṣayaḥ prabodhaś cāpy akṣayā śāntir eva ca ||

‘The absence of fear, the destruction of misery, the awakening, as well as the eternal peace of all yogins depend on the control of mind.’

The next kārikā shows how the mind can gradually be controlled without difficulty:

utseka udadher yadvat kuśāgreṇaikabindunā |
manaso nigrahas tadvad bhaved aparikhedataḥ ||

‘The control of mind without great pains is like the drawing out of a sea by drops with the point of a kuśa grass.’

The first half of the kārikā refers, according to Madhusūdana Sarasvatī (BG, VI. 23) Rāmakaṣṇa, a commentator of PD (XI. 109), where kārikā is quoted, to an old story, (cf. Tittibhopākhyāna, HU, pp. 78-79) which runs, as given by Madhusūdana Sarasvatī, as follows :

Once upon a time the sea carried off with its waves the eggs of a bird which were laid on the beach. The bird got angry and determined to dry it up. He began to take out the water drop by drop with the tip of his beak and he could not be dissuaded from it by the birds related to him. In the mean time the divine sage Nārada came there. He, too, asked him to turn back, but in vain. The bird said that anyhow he would dry up the sea either in this or in the future life. Fortunately Nārada became very kind to him, and sent there Garuḍa, the lord of birds, for his help. Owing to the wind produced by the flapping of the wings of Garuḍa the sea began to dry up and thus being frightened gave back the eggs to the bird.

The substance of the kārikā is that it is with determination and perseverance that mind is gradually controlled.

The author now suggests the means for controlling the mind :

42

upāyena nigṛhṇīyād vikṣiptaṃ kāmabhogayoḥ । suprasannaṃ laye caiva yathā kāmo layas tathā ॥

'By the means¹ one should control it (mind) when it is distracted in desire and enjoyment, and also when it remains at ease in the sleeping state, for the sleeping state is as (bad) as desire is.'

Kārikās III. 42-46 are quoted and explained by Madhusūdana Sarasvatī in the commentary on the BG,

¹ See III. 43-45.

VI. 26, and III. 44-45 a-b by Sadānanda in his Veśa §§32-33. According to the former kāma 'desire' is the state of thinking of, or longing for enjoyment (cintyamānāvasthā), while bhoga 'enjoyment' is the state of enjoying the desired thing (bhujyamānāvasthā). Laya 'sleeping state' is, in his opinion, deep sleep (suṣupti), as supported by Gauḍapāda himself (III. 35), but Sadānanda explains it by 'sleep' (nidrā). Laya causes mental inactivity, and corresponds to the state called mūḍha 'infatuated' in the yoga philosophy. See Vyāsa on YS, I. 1.

duḥkhaṃ sarvaṃ anusmṛtya kāmabhogān nivartayet । ajaṃ sarvaṃ anusmṛtya jātaṃ naiva tu paśyati ॥

'Repeatedly remembering that all is misery one should turn back (one's mind) from desires and enjoyments.' Indeed, repeatedly remembering that all is unborn one does not see anything born.'

The second half of the kārikā implies that when everything is unborn and consequently has no existence in reality there is no object for one's desire and enjoyment.

¹ Or we may write for 'one should, etc.', 'one should keep back (from mind) desires and enjoyments.' Thus, as says Madhusūdana Sarasvatī (BG, VI. 26), kāmabhogān in the kārikā may be explained as accusative plural or ablative singular.

laye sambodhayec cittaṃ vikṣiptaṃ śamayet punaḥ
sakaṣāyaṃ vijānīyāc chamaprāptaṃ na cālayet ॥

sleep; when distracted one should pacify it again. One should also investigate if it is with the evil passions (saḥaṣāya). And (finally) when it reaches the state of equanimity one should not cause it to move.'

As regards the control of mind there are four impediments enumerated in our kārikās (III. 42-45) of which vikṣepa 'distraction' and laya 'sleep' have already been mentioned also in kārikā 42, the other two being kaṣāya and sukha-, or according to some (VeS, §33) rasa-āsvāda. The last term will be explained in the next kārikā (45). We are concerned here with kaṣāya. It means here stabdhībhāva 'becoming stiffened' of mind as Madhusūdana Sarasvatī and Sadānanda would explain (loc. cit.). The primary meaning of kaṣāya is 'decoction,' so to say, of evil passions (rāga, dveṣa, moha). Śaṅkara explaining mṛditaḥkaṣāya in ChU, VII. 26. 2, writes: vārṇsādir iva kaṣāyo rāgadveṣādidoṣaḥ. It causes the stiffness of mind, owing to which it cannot be fixed on the object. Thus the kaṣāya, i.e., the evil passions, being the cause of stabdhībhāva, is explained by those authors to mean stabdhībhāva. We may, however, take the word in its actual sense, i.e., the evil passions.

Cf. MSA, XIV. 9c-d—10a-b :

linam cittasya gṛhṇīyād uddhatam śamayet punaḥ ||
śamaprāptam upekṣeta tasmin nālabhane punaḥ |

See also XIV. 11.

For śamaprāpta in d which gives better sense (cf. śamayet in d of the kārikā) and is supported by VeS, with its Tikā Vidvanmanorañjanī, §33 and MSA quoted above, the reading found in editions and a very large number of MSS is samaprāpta. It means one that has reached the state of equilibrium. Madhusūdana Sarasvatī takes the word sama in the sense of Brahman.

nāsvādayet sukham tatra niḥsaṅgaḥ prajñāyā bhavet
niścalam niścaraḥ cittam ekikuryāt prayatnataḥ ||

'There (in practising yoga) he should not enjoy happiness. By wisdom² he must be (then) free from all attachment. If mind which is (thus) fixed goes out, by endeavour he should do as to make it remain only in itself.'

On ekikuryāt 'should make one' the Commentator says citsvarūpasattāmātram evāpādayet. Cf. ekībhavati, BU, IV. 4. ekībhūta, MāU, 5.

¹ There is a feeling of happiness from that condition of mind in practising yoga, and it should be avoided as it is an impediment.

² Or, discrimination.

The next kārikā says that when the mind is thus completely controlled or suppressed (niruddha) and as such is free from all movements and does not perceive anything it becomes Brahman:

yadā na liyate cittam na ca vikṣipyate punaḥ |
anīganam anābhāsam niṣpannam brahma tat tadā

'When the mind is not in the state of sleep, nor is distracted again, and as such has no movement nor any senses-impression, then it becomes Brahman.'

See III. 35.

The first half refers to two states laya corresponding to mūḍha and vikṣepa corresponding to vikṣipta in the Vyāsa commentary on YS, I. 1. See III. 42. See also anidra asvapna in III. 36. The Commentator explains anābhāsa saying that it does not appear in the form of any of its objects which are imaginary (na kenacit kalpitenā viṣayabhāvenābhāsate). Ābhāsa is praticchāyā 'reflection'. See BAP, V. 36. Or it may be taken in the sense of 'appearance,' namely, the appearance of any object.

On d the Commentator says : yadaivaṃlakṣaṇaṃ cittaṃ tadā niṣpannaṃ brahma brahmasvarūpeṇa niṣpannaṃ cittaṃ bhavaty arthaḥ. Cf. IV. 77 where he writes : cittasyeti yā mokṣākhyā'nutpattiḥ and on IV. 80 cittasya niṣcalā calanavarjitā brahmasvarūpaiva tadā sthitiḥ yaiṣā brahmasvarūpā sthitiḥ cittasyādvayavijñānaikarasaghanalakṣaṇā.

In this connexion the following may be quoted from the BA, IV. 15 : cittasya brahmatādikam which BAP explains : cittasya phalaṃ brahmabhūyādikam.

It is said here that the anīṅana and anābhāsa citta becomes Brahman. With this compare the following :

The citta that becomes Brahman is described in the nekārikā :

47 svasthaṃ śāntaṃ sanirvāṇam akathyaṃ sukham uttamaṃ ajam ajena jñeyena sarvajñaṃ paricakṣate ॥

'They say it rests in itself¹ and is calm having nirvāṇa
it is unspeakable and the highest bliss, unborn, and (identical) with the knowable, which is also unborn, and is all-knowing.'

See III. 33, IV. 1.

The word nirvāṇa has different meanings, such as 'delight',
'extinction', 'cessation', 'disappearance', 'calmed', 'quieted'.

We may take it here in the sense of 'extinction'. The extinction of mind means the disappearance of its function of thinking (manana or cintana), in other words, the amanibhāva of manas referred to above (III. 31), and in MU, VI. 34, or vilaya of manas in MBU p. 12. This is also called unmanibhāva (BBU, 4), ṛttikṣaya of citta (MU, VI. 34, p. 178), and the nirodha of viññāna (= nirvāṇa) in DN, I. 223 (viññāna-ssa nirodhena).

Cf. YV, III. 67.8 :

spandād bhavati citsargo niḥspandād brahma śāsvatam ।

See also MU, VI. 24 (p. 143) :

mānase ca vilīne tu yat sukhaṃ cātmasākṣikam ।

tad brahma cāmṛtaṃ śukraṃ sā gatir loka eva ca ॥

For sarvajña see III. 36.

The author proposed in the beginning of this chapter (III. 2) to speak of non-origination (ajāti). Now having done so mainly with regard to jīva and partly also to other things he concludes thus :

48

na kaścij jāyate jīvaḥ sambhavo 'sya na vidyate । etat tad uttamaṃ satyaṃ yatra kiñcin na jāyate ॥¹

iti gaudapādiya āgamaśāstre 'dvaitākhyam tṛtiyam prakaraṇam samāptam.

'No individual soul is born, nor is there any possibility of it. This is that highest reality where nothing is born.

Here ends, in the Āgamaśāstra of G a u ḍ a p ā d a, Book Three called 'Non-duality'.

BOOK IV

The proposition was enunciated (III. 2), discussed and finally established in the last line of the last kārikā of the Book, and it will further be affirmed later on (IV.71) that there is nothing that originates, and this is the highest truth. In order to further elucidate this view the author now begins the present Book of his Āgamaśāstra.

Its first two kārikās form what is known in later Sanskrit works as maṅgalācaraṇa 'salutation, benediction, or prayer for success.' The first kārikā is as follows :

jñānenākāśakalpena¹ dharmān yo gaganopamān² । jñeyābhinnena³ sambuddhas taṃ vande dvīpadām varaṃ ।

'Who has perfectly understood the elements of existence (dharma) that are like the sky, through the knowledge (jñāna) which is not different from its object (jñeya) and is also like the sky, to him, to the greatest of men, I pay my homage.'

The author here pays his homage to dvīpadām varaṃ 'the greatest of men.' Who is this dvīpadām vara? The word dvīpad (RV, X. 165.1: śaṃ no astu dvīpade śaṃ catuṣpade) or dvīpada literally 'biped' means in such cases 'most excellent'. Words such as dvīpadām vara or dvīpadānām uttama (or dvīpadottama (Pali dvīpad'uttama) in compound are synonymous. They are used both as adjectives and nouns.

³ III.33; IV.88.

As an adjective dvipadām vara is found in MB, Vanaparvan, 54.45 (: naīśadho dvipadām varaḥ) and also in Ādiparvan, 220.36 (with reference to Dhṛtarāṣṭra: abhiṣṭauṣi ca yat kṣattuh samīpe dvipadām vara).⁴ In Buddhist literature, both Sanskrit and Pali, dvipadottama or dvipad'uttama in Pali or any one of the synonyms mentioned above is used to mean the Buddha (AP, 1; MSt, p. 60, l. 25; SNt, 83, 995, 998; MVt², § 267; SS, p. 8, 57, here in the last place not less than thirteen times). Narottama (Pāli nar'uttama) and puruṣottama (Pali puris'uttama) are also used specially for the Buddha [SNt, 544 (see DP, 78) 1021; MVt, § 1,40; MVu, Vol. II, pp. 194, 199, 232, 266].

On the other hand Ś takes dvipadām vara to mean puruṣottama in the sense of Nārāyaṇa.⁵

Now, which of them, the Buddha or Nārāyaṇa, is really meant by the author himself can be decided if we consider the subject matter of the kārikā.

There are mainly two points to be discussed here. First, jñāna 'knowledge' is said to be ākāśakalpa 'like the sky,' and again it is not different from the jñeya 'the knowable,' i.e., the object of knowledge. And second, the *dharma*s, 'elements of existence' or 'things or objects,' are also gaganopama 'like the sky.'

What are we to understand by the statement that jñāna is like the sky? One characteristic of jñāna, according to both our author and the Vijñānavādins, is that it is asaṅga (IV. 72, 96) 'having no attachment, contact, or relation.'

Such instances are there many. See I. 50.27.

⁵ It may be noted that so far as I know no word compounded with dvipad or dvipada is found in Brahmanic literature to mean Nārāyaṇa. But thanks to a friend who points out that dvipadām varīṣṭha which, in fact, is the same as dvipadām vara is applied at least once to Nārāyaṇa (MB, Śāntiparvan, 343. 1). But it is to be noted that though here it refers to Nārāyaṇa, no doubt, this Nārāyaṇa is not God (īśvara), but a sage (ṛṣi) and hence a man, though an incarnation of the former.

i.e., it does not relate itself to its object, it does not cognize any object (agraha, III. 32), there being no object whatsoever. See IV. 26, 27, 72, 96, 99, and the following from LA, p. 157: asaṅgalakṣaṇam jñānam.⁶ Now jñāna being asaṅga is compared here with the sky which is also asaṅga. See BA p. 359: evam° niṣprapancatvād ākāśavad asaṅgam anāspadam aśeṣam viśam utpaśyāmaḥ.⁸

As regards the absence of difference between jñāna and jñeya it is a well-known fact that this view is maintained by Vijñānavādins. According to them there is no reality of external things. Knowable is, in fact, inside being the transformation of vijñāna, and only appears to be outside. Dinnāga says in his Ālambanaparīkṣā, 6 (quoted by Śāṅkara in his commentary on BS, II. 2. 28 and Kamalaśīla in his Pañjikā on TS, p. 582: yad antarjñeyarūpam tad bahirvad ababhāṣate).⁹ And Dharmakīrti formulates it in his PV,¹⁰ fol. 274a, l. 7 in the following

⁶ Sometimes there is made a difference between jñāna and vijñāna as in the following passages of the same work (LA) will show saying that jñāna is asaṅga; p. 157: tatotpannapradhvaṃsi vijñānam anutpannapradhvaṃsi jñānam; asaṅgalakṣaṇam jñānam viśayaivaicitryasaṅgalakṣaṇam ca vijñānam; asaṅgasvabhāvalakṣaṇam jñānam; aprāptilakṣaṇam jñānam; ASP, p. 3: asaṅgalakṣaṇa subhūte prajñāpāramitā. See also MV, p. 533: nimittālambar vijñānam, jñānena hi śūnyatālambar bhavitavyam, taccānutpādarūpam eveti. See IV. 96, notes.

⁸ See also BA with BAP, IX. 155.

⁹ The other half runs as follows: so 'rtho vijñānarūpatvāt tatpratrayatayā ca. See also TS, p. 582:

nīlapitādi yaj jñāne bahirvad ababhāṣate |
tatra satyam ato nāsti vijñeyam tattvato bahiḥ ||

anabhisaṃskṛtā asthitā asaṃsthitā avyavasthitā anutpannā aniruddhā ākāśakalpatvād avikalpāḥ.

See BAP, p. 395, quoted above, and specially our text, IV. 93,

Or because the *dharma*s are beyond enumeration (gaṇanā-samatikṛānta), they are gaganopama.¹⁸

Or, it may be that as jñāna is asaṅga and is thus like the sky, so are asaṅga the *dharma*s, and as such they are like the sky. See IV. 96. That the sky is asaṅga needs no explanation.

One of the grounds on which this theory is based is that the things are niḥsvabhāva, i.e., without their own nature and condition or state of being (svabhāva). And that which has not its own state of being is nothing but the sky and void (ākāśa, śūnya).¹⁹

Or again, as in fact the things have naturally neither origination nor suppression, they are like the sky. See LA, X. 172 :

aniruddhāḥ anutpannāḥ prakṛtyā gaganopamāḥ ।

Ś does not explain here as to how jñāna is ākāśakalpa and the *dharma*s are gaganopama. He would, however, explain the non-difference of jñāna and jñeya saying that jñeya refers to ātman (or strictly *ātman*s), and jñāna is not different from ātman.

BA, V. 12: durjanān gaganopamān on which BAP writes śatravo hi gagaṇasamatvād aparyantāḥ.

¹⁹ See BAP, p. 503: ato 'bhiniṣkṛīyamāṇo niḥsvabhāvatayā ākāśaṃ śūnyam eva; pp. 504-505: tat ko 'tra kāyaḥ. tasya pratyavekṣamāṇasya bhavati—ākāśa-samo 'yaṃ kāyaḥ.' sarvam etad ākāśam iti paśyati "

Now the word dharma used here in this kārikā and more than twenty-two times in this Book,²⁰ requires some explanation. It is very widely used in such cases as to present one throughout Buddhist literature in Sanskrit and also in Pali.²¹ Figuratively it means a thing or object, a thing which the senses or mind takes cognition and as such, it is a synonym of such Sanskrit words as artha or padārtha or viśaya or prameya. Literally it has among others the sense of nature, character, peculiar condition or essential quality, in Sanskrit svabhāva or svalakṣaṇa. It is derived from √dhṛ 'to hold, maintain, preserve, keep.' Because a thing in whatever form it may be maintains its own characteristics or essential quality (svalakṣaṇa or svabhāva), it is called dharma. So we read AKB, p. 6: lakṣaṇadhāraṇād dharmāḥ (raṇ.gi.matsha.ñid.ḥdzin.paḥi.phyir.chos.te). See MV, pp. 304, 404. Buddha ghoṣa (AS, §94, p. 39) explains the term in the following words: (i) attano pana sabhāvaṃ dhārentiti dhammā (ii) dhāriyanti vā paccayehi, (iii) dhāriyanti vā yathāsabhāvatā dhammā.²² According to it rasa, sparsa, etc., are *dharma*s. Only these are there and not also dharmīns 'those endowed with or having a dharma,' as the Buddhists hold unlike some non-Buddhist philosophers as Naiyāyikas and Vaiśeṣikas according to whom earth, or jars, etc., are dharmīns, while the qualities, i.e., hardness (kāṭhinya), etc., are *dharma*s. In Buddhist philosophy it is only the quality of tangibility called 'hardness' (kāṭhinya, sparsa) that is regarded as existent,

²² It is thus translated in Ex., p. 50: "Dharma may be defined as states which bear their own intrinsic natures, or which are borne by causes, or which are borne according to their own characteristics."

there is no entity excepting it that we call earth, or the element of earth. Āryadeva says in his CŚ, 309 :

kāṭhinā dṛśyate bhūmiḥ sā ca kāyena grhyate । tena hi kevalaṃ sparśo bhūmir eṣe ti kathyate ॥²³

'It is seen that the earth is hard and that is perceived with one's body. Therefore it is said that the earth is only the quality of tangibility.'

Thus, as says Stcherbatsky in his Central Conception of Buddhism, p. 26, 'If we say "earth has odour, etc.," it is only an inadequate expression; we ought to say "earth is odour, etc.," since beside these sense-data there is absolutely nothing the name could be applied to.'²⁴

It is also to be borne in mind in this connexion that in the absolute truth there is nothing as avayavin 'one having portions' as in other systems. It is owing to this fact that expressions like the following are found in Buddhist works :

nāstīha sattva ātmā vā dharmāstv ete sahetukāḥ |²⁵

This theory of dharma seems to be exactly the same as that of the tattva of the Sāṅkhyas. The word tattva (tat-tva) literally ²³ This is a reconstructed verse from Tibetan which runs :

sa . ni . brtan . shes . bya . bar . mthoñ |

See V, 82; AK and AKV¹, l. 35 (p. 69) : "prthividhātuḥ katamaḥ . khakkhaṭatvam iti vistaraḥ; MV, pp. 66-67: iha tu kāṭhinyādivyatirikta-prthivyādyasambhavaḥ sati na yukto viśeṣyaviśeṣaṇabhāvaḥ." evaṃ prthivyā-dināṃ yady api kāṭhinyādivyatiriktaṃ vicāryamāṇaṃ lakṣyaṃ nāsti, lakṣyavyatirekeṇa ca lakṣaṇaṃ nirāśrayaṃ tathāpi saṃvṛtiḥ eveti." YB, 16^b : khakkhaṭatvaṃ katamat, prthivī. This view is found also in the Garbhopaniṣad, l. : tatra yat kāṭhinaṃ sā prthivī.

²⁵ Quoted in MV, p. 355 as a saying of the Bhagavata.

means 'thatness,' i.e., 'the state of that (referring to a thing) and hence it signifies 'nature (svabhāva)' or 'true nature'. Thus, in fact, tattva is a guṇa, yet each of the twenty-five categories in the system is considered as a tattva (pañcaviṃśat tattva), and not tattvavat 'having tattva.' When the three guṇas, viz., sattva, rajas, and taṃas, are in equal condition (sāmyāvasthā), they are collectively called prakṛti. prakṛti is itself a tattva, it has no tattva.²⁶ It consists in the three guṇas, it has no guṇa, though sometimes even in authoritative works it is loosely said that it has three guṇas. Thus it is a well-known fact that teachers belonging to other systems say that in Sāṅkhya there is no difference between a guṇa and guṇin or *dravya*²⁷ (guṇadravyayos tādātmyam), or between a dharma and a dharmin (dharma-dharminor abhedah).²⁸

Says Aśvaghoṣa (BCK, XII. 76) :

guṇino hi guṇānāṃ ca vyatireko na vidyate ।
rūpoṣṇābhyāṃ virahito na hy agnir upalabhyate ॥

²⁶ See Tattvayāthārthyadīpanī included in the Sāṅkhyasamgraha (Chakamba Sanskrit Series), pp. 72-93: tattvāniti tāntriki saṃjñā. tadar cātmanātmavivekapratyogyanuyoginas tattatpadārthāḥ . teṣāṃ bhāvāḥ tatpadanimittāni puruṣatvaprakṛitvādini pañcaviṃśatijātayaḥ . dharmadharma-abhedād vyaktayo 'pi tattvānity ucyate.

²⁸ See Viṣṇuānabhikṣu on SS, II. 5 where the following is quoted:

śaktiśaktimator bhedam paśyanti paramārthataḥ |
abhedam cānupaśyanti yoginas tattvacintakāḥ ॥

It may be noted in this connexion that V a s u b a n d h u in his Vijñānamātrasiddhi applies the term dharma to the tattvas of the Sāṅkhyas (O. Rosenberg).²⁹

It is not that in Brahmanical works the word dharma is not used in the above sense. For instance, see KU, I. 1. 21 : aṇur eṣa dharmāḥ.³⁰ Y ā s k a (Nt, I. 20) writes sākṣātḥtadharmaṇaḥ. Here the word dharman differs from dharma only in form and not also in sense, as the former, too, means artha or padārtha 'a thing.' V ā c a s p a t i explains in his Tātparyaṭīkā the word sākṣātḥtadharman used by V ā t s y ā y a n a (NS, I. 1.7), saying sudṛghena pramāṇenāvadhāritā arthā yena sa sākṣātḥtadharmaḥ. Evidently he takes here dharman in the sense of artha. V y ā s a in his commentary on YS, II. 17, explains dṛśya by buddhisattvopārūḍhāḥ sarve dharmāḥ.

In our present Book here and in other places Ś takes dharma to mean ātman. But this seems to be forced. To imply ātman our author uses in every case ātman or jīva.³¹ Why should he employ in this chapter 'dharma' for it? Undoubtedly these two terms are well-known in their meanings. So there is no ground for giving preference to such a word as dharma in the sense of ātman. In all the twenty-two cases in the present Book dharma is easily construed in the sense of 'a thing,' literally 'an element of existence' as in Buddhist literature. But while in some of them Ś takes the word to mean ātman, in others he could not do so. In some cases he did not explain the word at all, and certainly the meaning ātman cannot be accepted

³¹ See for ātman I. 12; II. 12, 17; III. 3, 4, 7, 8, 11, 13, 14; for jīva I. 16; III. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 11, 13, 14, 48; IV. 63, 68, 69, 70.

in them. For instance, in the text sarve dharmā mṛṣā svapne (IV. 33) the word dharma can in no way mean ātman. In two cases he explains it saying hastyādīn bāhyadharmān (IV. 41), and bāhyadharmāḥ (IV. 54). Once he writes ātmāno 'nye ca dharmāḥ (IV. 58). In one case (IV. 82), however, he gives the actual sense, i.e., vastu 'thing'.³²

It can further be shown from the words of the author himself that in meaning dharma and bhāva (= vastu = padārtha) are identical. See the following passages :

(i) ajātasyaiva bhāvasya (III. 20^a) and ajātasyaiva dharmasya (IV. 6^a).

(ii) ajāto hy amṛto bhāvaḥ (III. 20^c) and ajāto hy amṛto dharmāḥ (IV. 6^c).

(iii) svabhāvenāmṛto yasya bhāvaḥ (III. 22^{c-d}) and svabhāvenāmṛto yasya dharmāḥ (IV. 7^{c-d}).

It is to be noted that while bhāva is used only in the second and third Books³³ of the work, dharma in the above sense is used only in Book IV. and this is very significant indicating the Buddhist relationship of the subject dealt with in it.

There is one thing more. It is said in the kārikā that he to whom the author pays his homage perfectly understood the dharmas. Here if he is meant to be N ā r ā y a ṇ a one would naturally ask : What is the authority for it? Where is it found that he actually did so? This question demands a reply from those who hold that N ā r ā y a ṇ a is referred to here. Not only what we have seen above with regard to the first kārikā, but also the whole chapter, as can be shown, is in favour of the Buddha.

³³ Kārikās II. 1, 13, 16, 17, 19, 29, 33; and III. 20, 22.

In the second kārīkā the author salutes the teacher of the asparśayoga:

asparśayogo vai nāma sarvasattvasukho hitaḥ |
avivādo 'viruddhaś ca deśitas taṃ namāmy aham ||

'I salute him (who has) taught the asparśayoga which conduces to happiness of all beings and is beneficial and free from dispute and opposition.'

I construe the kārīkā taking yena 'by whom' as understood, thus differing a little from the commentator, Ś, who says that it is the asparśayoga that is saluted here.

In the kārīkā avivāda refers to the fact that our theory is not contradicted by theories of other schools, and aviruddha implies that it involves no self-contradiction or is not against any other position held by us.

Now what is the asparśayoga, by whom and where has it been taught? The word does not occur in the Upaniṣads, though Ś says on III. 39, where also it is described, that it is well-known in the Upaniṣads (prasiddham upaniṣatsu). See also III. 37, 38. The following is found in KU, II. 3. 10:

yadā pañcāvatiṣṭhante jñānāni manasā saha |
buddhiś ca na viceṣṭate tām āhuḥ paramāṃ gatim ||

'When the five (instruments of) knowledge stand still together with the mind, and when the intellect does not move, that is called the highest state.'

Similar statements are met with in other Upaniṣads.¹ But though they in fact may point to what is called asparśayoga, as will presently be explained, it is not termed asparśayoga.

The word asparśayoga literally means the yoga in which there is no contact, or the faculty of perception by touch. The author himself says (III. 37) it is a samādhi 'profound abstract concentration,' it is very difficult to realize. It points to what is asamprajñāta samādhi (YS, I. 2, 18, 51 with the scholiast Vyāsa),² or nirvikalpa samādhi (PD, II. 28) of the yogins. But nowhere in their systems, so far as my information goes, it is called asparśayoga.³ Why is it that the word asparśa is used here?

I am inclined to think that it refers to the ninth or the last of the nine dhyanas or meditations called anupūrvavivāha (Pali anupubbavivāha) or the successive states of dhyaṇa which the Buddha taught and are found frequently in Buddhist texts. They are as follows:

I. Four rūpa dhyanas or the meditations of which rūpa 'matter' is the object, viz.—

- (i) prathama dhyāna or the first stage of meditation.
- (ii) dvitīya dhyāna or the second stage of meditation.
- (iii) tṛtīya dhyāna or the third stage of meditation.
- (iv) caturtha dhyāna or the fourth stage of meditation.

II. The four arūpa dhyanas or the meditations of which the object is not matter, viz.—

(i) ākāśānantyāyatana (Pali ākāśānāncāyatana) or the plane of infinity of space.

² Vyāsa explains (YS, I. 2) it: na tatra kiñcit samprajñāyāta asamprajñātaḥ 'as nothing is known there it is called asamprajñāta.'

(ii) viññānānantyāyatana (Pali viññāṇañcā°) or the place of infinity of pure consciousness.

(iii) ākāñcāyatana (Pali ākāñcāññā°) or the place of nothingness.

(iv) naivasamjñā-nāsamjñāyatana (Pali nevasaññānāsaññā°) or the place neither of consciousness nor of unconsciousness.

And the ninth is saṃjñāveditanirodha (Pali saññāvedayitanirodha) or the cessation or complete suppression of consciousness and sensation.

As in the ninth or last stage of yoga or meditation not only sensation or consciousness, but also all the mental properties or mentals (caitta or caitasika dharmas), headed by sparsa (Pali phassa) 'contact,'⁵ are restricted or suppressed with the citta or mind itself, it is called asparśayoga. It is to be noted that the word sparsa employed here implies also the other mentals of which it is the first. The cessation of vedanā is possible only when sparsa ceases, as is clearly shown in the SN, IV, p. 220 (XXXVI. 15.4): phassasamudayā vedanāsamudayo phassanirodhā vedanānirodho. It means that sparsa is the cause of vedanā, so when there is sparsa there is vedanā, and when there is no sparsa there is no vedanā.⁶ The fact that in this state of nirodha (which is the same as asamprajñāta or nirbīja or nirvikalpa samādhi) the mind and its properties (citta and caitta or caitasika) completely cease to work is clearly described by B u d d h a g h o s a in his VM, p. 552.⁷

It is said (III. 39) that asparśayoga is very difficult to realize. From this very fact the word asparśayoga may be explained quite in a different way. In Buddhist Sanskrit works there is frequent use of such words as sparsavihāra (Mv¹, 8349, 835 Tk, p. 28, ll. 18), sparsavihāratā (Mv¹, 6288), and asparśavihāra (AAA, p. 326; Tk, p. 28, ll. 17, 19; p. 30, ll. 15, 20). Sthiramati explains the last word in his commentary on Tk, p. 28, l. 18, saying: sparsaḥ sukhaṃ tena sahito vihāraḥ sparsavihāraḥ, na sparsavihāro 'sparsavihāraḥ. He says that sparsa means sukha 'joy, content, ease, comfort'; sparsavihāra is a state with it; and asparśavihāra is its opposite. In Tibetan sparsavihāra is translated by bde.gnas.pa, literally the Sanskrit equivalent to which is sukhasthiti (or sukhāvasthiti) 'pleasant state.' In Pali sparsavihāra is phāsuvihāra in the same meaning.⁸ In this light asparśayoga in sense nothing but asukhayoga (a-sukhayoga) meaning thereby 'yoga which is not one that can be attained with ease.' The explanation is fully supported by what we know of it in II. 39: It is very difficult to realize and yogins shrink from it seeing fear though in fact there is no fear.

For its explanation see Sthiramati on Tk, p. 20, ll. 1, 2, 7, 9, 10; p. 28, l. 18.

We read in the present kārikā that this yoga conduces to happiness of all beings (sarvasattvasukha). This is found also in Buddhist works where it is said (SN, Vol. IV, p. 228=XXXIV. 19. 20)⁹ that the highest bliss is felt in the saññāvedayitanirodha (or sammāvedayita° according to the Chinese version. sammāvedayita° samyag).

⁹ idhānanda bhikkhu sabbaso nevasaññānāsaññāyatanaṃ samatikkamā saññāvedayitanirodham upasampajja viharati. idaṃ kho ānanda etamhā sukhaṃ aññaṃ sukhaṃ abhikkantataraṃ ca pañitaraṃ ca. See also the next paragraph (21) for the reply to a question raised here. Cf. AN, Vol. IV, pp. 414-415.

It may, however, be observed here that considering the use of the word sparsā, BG, II. 14, V. 27, and the explanations offered there by Ś and other commentators the interpretation as given in the present case as well as in III. 39 by Ś cannot be rejected.

It is to be noted here that attempt has been made above to interpret the word asparśayoga in different ways, but it seems that the best interpretation may be found in Asaṅga's Yogācārabhūmi. After what is written above a transcription¹⁰ of that work has come to my hands and the following is quoted here from it :

[78b] kathaṃ nirodhaṃ samāpadyamānasya naivaṃ bhavati ahaṃ nirodhaṃ samāpadye vā vyuttiṣṭhe vā. samāpattikāle nirabhisaṃskāreṇa cittanirodhāt.^o

¹⁰ This is made by Rāhula Sāṅkṛtyāyana, and he has kindly given it to me. An edition of this work is undertaken by the present author for the Asutosh Sanskrit Series, Calcutta University.

¹¹ For the variants of this word see AK, IV. 107 (where different authorities are quoted); MV, pp. 334.5; AKV², pp. 389 ff.

We know from it that in the stage of nirodhasamāpatti or mind is completely suppressed, hence there is no experience whatsoever. But in the stage called vyuti 'rising up' one has three kinds of sparsā 'experience,' known as ānījya, ākiñcanya, and ānimitta. The word sparsā in these cases means 'experience' or 'that which is experienced', meaning here 'to experience.'¹²

Now, because in the yoga called nirodhasamāpatti there is no sparsā of anything, it is rightly named asparśayoga.

It is said (III. 39^{c-d}) of the asparśayoga that yogins or untrained ones shrink back from it, imagining fear whereas in reality there is no fear: yogino bibhyati hy asmād abhayaadarśinaḥ. But what is the cause of their fear? Ś says that the so-called yogins think that it will annihilate the self.¹³ Indeed, there is hardly any difference between a yogin in this state and a dead person, their respiration being completely stopped. So when the Blessed One entered that state, saññāvedayitanirodha before his parinirvāṇa, Ānanda took him to be dead. But the venerable Anuruddha said to him that that was not the case, the Blessed one only having entered the stage of the dhyaṇa called saññāvedayitanirodha. After a certain time, however, He passed away.¹⁴ It is therefore quite natural that an untrained yogin should be afraid of it, as of death.

Yet there is a real difference between death and asparśayoga or saññāvedayitanirodha, and Buddhaghosa has explained it in his VM, p. 558, quoting a passage from the Suttapiṭaka which says that all the conditions in both of them are one and the same excepting this that in the latter the heat of the body lost, that life does not come to an end, and that the organs of sense are not destroyed, while in the former all these are annihilated.

We have seen in the present kārikā that this yoga is taught by the Buddha. It cannot be denied that up to the eighth of those successive states of dhyāna (anupūrvavīhāra) already explained, viz., 'neither-consciousness-nor-unconsciousness', there is nothing particularly Buddhist. For it is evident from Buddhist literature, both Pali and Sanskrit, that the Buddha's two teachers Ālāra Kālāma (Āḍāra Kālāpa) and Uddaka Rāmaputta (Rudraka Rāmaputra) knew the seventh and eighth of the dhyānas, respectively.¹⁵ The Buddha was, however, not satisfied with what he had from his teachers, and he started thereupon to seek after a still higher state and succeeded in realizing it. It is this state which is called saññāvedayitanirodha or briefly nirodha.

There is one thing more which suggests that the asparśayoga was not originally taught in the Brahmanic system of yoga. It is said in the kārikā that this yoga is 'not disputed' (avivāda)¹⁶ and 'not opposed' (aviruddha). It is implied, as said before, from these two words that in the acceptance of the asparśayoga by the Vedantists, among whom the author himself is included, there cannot be raised any dispute or opposition, for there is nothing to be opposed even from their own point of view.

Thus it is clear from what we have seen above that the real instructor of the asparśayoga, who is saluted here by the author, is no other than the Buddha.

Let us now follow what the author has to say in this Book (IV). The subject matter of it is a-jāti (= an-utpatti, an-utpāda) 'non-becoming' or 'non-origination,' or, in other words, the doctrine that there is nothing about which it can be said that it is produced.

¹⁵ MN, Vol. I, pp. 8-9 (Ariyapariyesanasutta, I. 3.6.); LV, Vol. I, pp. 238-239, 243-244; BCK, XII. 63, 83; Kern: Manual of Buddhism, 1896, p. 55.

¹⁶ See IV. 5.

There are two classes of teachers: one (i.e., the followers of the systems of the Sāṅkhya and the Vedānta¹) holding doctrine of actual existence of an effect in its cause (satkāyavāda), and the other (i.e., the Naiyāyikas and the Vaiśeṣikas) maintaining the theory of non-existence of an effect in its cause (asatkāryavāda). The author refers to these two views in the third kārikā which runs as follows:

bhūtasya jātim icchanti vādinaḥ kecid eva hi |
abhūtasypāre dhīrā vivadantaḥ parasparam ||

'There are only certain disputants who maintain that 'origination' is of a thing which is already existent, while there are others of firm resolve who hold that it is of a thing which is non-existent.³ Thus they dispute with each other.'

¹ See SK, IX; BS, II. I. 14-18 with Ś; Ś on BU, I. 2. 2, (p. 20): kāryasya sato jāyamānasya kāraṇe saty utpattidarśanāt. Among the Buddhists Vaibhāṣikas maintain satkāryavāda. See CS, IX. 15 and our text, IV, II, not

² See NK, pp. 143 ff. Among the Buddhists Sautrāntikas and Yogācārins hold asatkāryavāda. CS, IX. 15.

³ The interpretation of the words bhūta and abhūta by Ś in the text here is quite different from that in III. 23, and it is very remarkable.

The Ācārya now proceeds to mention in the next kārikā the doctrine of the Buddhists who subscribe to neither of these two views asserting absolute 'non-becoming' (ajāti) of things:

bhūtaṃ na jāyate kiñcid abhūtaṃ naiva jāyate |
vivadanto 'dvayā hy evam ajātiṃ khyāpayanti te ||

'That which is already existent does not come into being and that which is non-existent does not also come into being'

disputing thus the followers of the doctrine of advaya assert absolute non-becoming (ajāti).²

Before discussing the meaning of the kārikā it is to be noted that the reading that can reasonably be accepted in c is not vivadanto dvayā as in many editions, but vivadanto'dvayā with our MS. M^e, and some editions.¹ It is supported also by the commentary in those editions, as well as by the MS. Ka used in the Anandasram edition of 1900.

The word advaya in the kārikā is, in fact, identical in meaning with Advayavādin, which is well-known even to an ordinary reader of Sanskrit as one of the names for the Buddha.² Some of the commentators of Amk explain advaya in advayavādin as advaita.³ But there is a marked difference between the two terms advaitavāda and advayavāda; while the former literally means the theory of non-difference, i.e., the non-difference between, or identity of (according to the school of Ś) Jiva and Brahman, the latter means the theory of 'non-two', i.e., neither of the two extreme views.

The two (dvaya) or the two extreme views are as follows: The Buddha does not hold that anything exists, nor does he hold that it does not exist. He rejects both of these two extreme views and propounds his view taking a middle path (majjhimā patipadā or madhyamā pratipad). So according to Amk, I. I. 14; MV¹, 23; DA, p. 95: buddhānam bhagavatām mahākāruṇikānām advayavādinām. In the Index of words to the last work, the word advaitavādin is wrongly written.

² For instance, B h ā n u j i d i k ṣ i t a : advayam advaitam vadanty avasyam; K ṣ i r a s v ā m i n : advayam vijñānadvaitam vadaty avasyam.

Advayavādin, the exact Tibetan equivalent of which is gñis . su . med . pa . gsuñ ba, and Chinese pu-êrh-yü, both literally meaning 'one who says not two' is misunderstood in the Sanskrit-Tibetan-English Vocabulary (Memoirs of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Vol. IV, 1913, p. 2, for the word can in no way mean 'not doubtful in his command' as it is explained there.

him nothing is existent, nor is anything non-existent; nothing comes into being (anutpāda), nor does anything disappear (anirōdha); nothing is eternal (aśāśvata), nor has anything an end (anuccheda); nothing is identical (eṇa), nor anything differentiated (aneṇa); nothing moves hither (anāgama), and nothing moves thither (anirgama).⁴

This advayavāda is found throughout the Buddhist sacred literature both in Sanskrit and Pali.⁵ That the reading in c of the kārikā must be with the word advayāḥ and not dvayāḥ further be perfectly clear to anyone when one considers that in the preceding kārikā two classes of teachers are referred to, who hold the theory of origination (jātivāda). According to one of them the origination is of the existent, while in accordance with the other, it is of the non-existent. These teachers are dvaitins 'advocates of dualism', viz., the Sāṃkhyas, the Naiyāyikas and the Vaiśeṣikas. The teachers alluded to in the present kārikā are, however, quite of a different view. They do not discuss as to whether the origination is of the existent or of the non-existent, but assert that there is no origination at all (ajātim khyāpayanti te). Thus the teachers alluded to in kārikās 3 and 4 are different, though Ś takes them to be identical.

⁴ So says N ā g ā r j u n a, MV, p. II:

As is evident, the main subject of this chapter is the theory of non-origination (ajātivāda). In different systems of Indian philosophy it is held that things around us have their origination; in other words, they are produced; they have their causes, they themselves being their effect. But it is the Buddhists who hold quite a different view emphatically denying the origination of anything in the world. Thus the first sentence of Nāgārjuna's MK begins with anirodham *anutpāda*⁶ 'having neither origination nor suppression'. This anutpāda is thoroughly discussed and established in the work as in others. Let here be quoted only a few lines in translation from that book together with the commentary Candrakīrtti (MK, I. 1 with MV, p. 12) :

'Now...the Ācārya, thinking the facility in refuting nirodha after utpāda is refuted, begins first with the refutation of the latter. Utpāda of a thing may be supposed by the opponent from a cause which may be either it itself, or something other than it, or both, or again, from one which is no cause at all. But in no way it can be justified. So he (the Ācārya) says

"Nowhere and never are such things as are produced either from themselves, or from some other things, or from both, or from what is no cause at all." ⁷

This non-origination is asserted again and again in the same work and sometimes in identical words:

na svato jāyate bhāvaḥ parato naiva jāyate |
na svataḥ parataś caiva jāyate jāyate kutaḥ ||

MK, XXI. 13. See XXIII. 2

'A thing does not come into being from itself, nor from other (=not-itself), nor from both, itself and other. How can it come into being?'

⁷ idānim° utpādapratīśedhena nirodhapratīśedhasaukaryam manyamācāryaḥ prathamam evotpādapratīśedham ārabhate. utpādo hi paraiḥ kalpo mānaḥ svato vā parikalpyeta parata ubhayato 'hetuto vā parikalpyeta. sarvatra ca nopapadyata iti niscitya āha :

na svato nāpi parato na dvābhyām nāpy ahetutaḥ |
utpannā jātu vidyante bhāvāḥ kvacana kecana||

MK, I. 1; MV, p.

Compare this with the following line from our kārikā, IV. 22 which speaks for itself:

svato vā parato vāpi na kiñcid vastu jāyate ।

'Nothing is produced either from itself or from other.'

For further details one may be referred to MK, I and XXIII with MV; CŚ, XV. See also our kārikā, IV. 22.

That there is no jāti or utpāda 'origination' is thus maintained also in a short line of the BA, IX. 106:

evam ca sarvadharmāṇām utpattir nāvasīyate ।⁸

'Thus the origination of all things is not known.'

The first half of the present kārikā is undoubtedly based on such statement as the following of Nāgārjuna (MK, I. 6):

naivāsato naiva sataḥ pratyō'rthasya yujyate ।
asataḥ pratyayaḥ kasya sataś ca pratyayena kiṃ ॥⁹

For the wording in b of the kārikā (abhūtaṃ naiva jāyate) see CŚ, 373^d (XV. 23^d): nābhūto nāma jāyate. See here also Candrakīrti on CŚ, 366 (XV. 16): atrāḥa: jāto na jāyate ajāto 'pi na jāyate.¹⁰ It may be noted here that in this book, too, the doctrine of non-origination is fully discussed.

Ś explains the first half of the present kārikā as follows:

bhūtaṃ vidyamānaṃ vastu na jāyate vidyamānatvād eva°.
tathā abhūtaṃ avidyamānaṃ avidyamānatvān naiva jāyate śaśaviṣṇavat.

'The thing which is already existent does not (again) come into being owing to its very existence. And the thing that is not existent does not come into being on account of its being non-existent, as, for instance, the horn of a hare.'¹¹

Gauḍapāda refers to the doctrine of ajāti in the present kārikā, and accepts it in the next which runs as follows:

khyāpyamānām ajātiṃ tair anumodāmahe vayam । vivadāmo na taiḥ sārddham avivadaṃ nibodhata ॥

'We express our approval of ajāti which they declare; we do not dispute with them, and listen how there cannot be any dispute.'

It is to be noted here that Gauḍapāda is a Vedantist, and yet he accepts the doctrine of non-origination of the Advaya-vādins or Buddhists expressing his approval. He does not see any use disputing with them and invites apparently his Vedantist followers to listen to him as to why the view cannot be disputed.

Like the Sāṅkhyas, the Naiyāyikas, and the Vaiśeṣikas, etc. the Vedantists are originally believers in the doctrine of origination, as is evident from the BS, I. 1. 2 (: janmādy asya yataḥ, 'From whom are the origination, etc. of this') which is based on such statements of the Upaniṣads as TU, III. 1. 1: yato vā imāni bhūtāni jātāni° tad Brahma, 'That is Brahma from whom these beings are originated.' The reality of the origination or creation is denied later on in the school of Advaita in the absolute truth. This is due to the doctrine of Gauḍapāda who invites here his followers to listen as to how the non-origination doctrine of the Advayavādins can be approved.

Having thus introduced his readers to the subject he has to deal, the author now proceeds in the following kārīkās to offer his arguments as to how the doctrine of jāti cannot be justified. He says:

ajātasyaiva dharmasya jātim icchanti vādinah
ajāto hy amṛto dharmo martyatām katham eṣyati ||¹

'Disputants are of opinion that there is birth only of that thing (lit. 'element of existence') which is unborn. But how is it that the thing which is unborn and (consequently) immortal should become mortal?'²

It means that the teachers of both the classes referred to in kārīkā 3 are agreed upon the point that birth is possible of what is unborn; for what is already born does not take birth again, and so it is useless to think of the birth of such a thing. Our author says that the birth of an unborn one cannot be justified, and he offers the following arguments: It is accepted on all hands that what has no birth (ajāta) has also no death (amṛta). Now when you say that birth is of an unborn one, you have necessarily to admit that it has death; and so it follows that you also admit the death of an immortal

¹ The kārīkās 6, 7, and 8 of this Book are identical with the kārīkās 20, 21 and 22 of the Book III respectively excepting only this that in kārīkās III. 20 and 22 there is the word bhāva, while in IV. 6 and 8 the reading is dharma.

For the words jāta and ajāta see MK, XX. 12-14.

² According to Ś the second half of the kārīkā ('But how is it that the thing which is unborn and immortal should become mortal') means, in fact, that how it should take birth in reality. He writes: svabhāvenāmṛto bhāvo martyatām gacchati paramārthato jāyate. III. 22.

one. Now an unborn one is by its own nature immortal. And this death of the immortal one is utterly absurd.

The author continues in support of his above statement:

7

na bhavaty amṛtaṃ martyaṃ na martyaṃ amṛtaṃ tathā prakṛter anyathābhāvo na kathañcid bhaviṣyati ||¹

'The immortal does not become mortal and a mortal one does not also become immortal; for the change of nature can in no way be possible.'

The second half of the kārīkā is repeated in kārīkā IV. 2 and seems to have mostly been taken here from N ā g ā r j u n a's MK, XV. 8, which runs as follows:

yady astitvaṃ prakṛtyā syān na bhaved asya nāstitā |
prakṛter anyathābhāvo na hi jātūpadyate ||²

The author having shown here that nature does in no way change says in the next kārīkā that if a thing which in its own nature is unborn (ajāta) and hence regarded as immortal (amṛta) comes into being (jāyate) and thus becomes mortal (martya) then owing to this very fact it cannot remain changeless. The point is that which is unborn or immortal by its own nature should remain always so. But if you say that the unborn takes ¹ See III. 21, and the note 1 on IV. 6.

² The following may also be quoted here from the same work:

prakṛtau kasya cāsatyām anyathātvaṃ bhaviṣyati |
prakṛtau kasya ca satyām anyathātvaṃ bhaviṣyati || XV. 9.
kasya syād anyathābhāvaḥ svabhāvaś cen na vidyate | birth, or the immortal becomes mortal, evidently it undergoes a change. But no change of nature is possible. The kārikā runs :

8

svabhāvenāmṛto yasya dharmo gacchati martyatām । kṛtakenāmṛtas tasya katham sthāsyati nīścalaḥ ॥¹

'How can he, according to whom a thing which is naturally immortal becomes mortal², maintain that an immortal thing, when it becomes artificial³, will remain changeless?'

The following may here be quoted from Nāgārjuna's MK, XV. 1-2 in which one should note the word kṛta:⁴

na sambhavaḥ svabhāvasya yuktaḥ pratyayahetubhiḥ । hetupratyayasambhūtaḥ svabhāvaḥ kṛtako bhavet ॥ svabhāvaḥ kṛtako nāma bhaviṣyati punaḥ katham । akṛtrimaḥ svabhāvo hi nirapekṣaḥ paratra ca ॥

² That is, takes birth. See note 2 on IV. 6.

⁴ It seems that our author had these kārikās of Nāgārjuna in his mind while writing his own and so he has unconsciously written kṛta instead of kṛtakatva as is required.

In order to explain as to how nature (prakṛti or svabhāva) cannot change Gauḍapāda proceeds to define it in the next kārikā:

sāmsiddhikī svābhāvikī saha jāpy akṛtā ca yā । prakṛtiḥ seti vijñeyā svabhāvaṃ na jahāti yā ॥

'That is to be known nature (prakṛti) which is self-existent, natural, innate, not artificial and one that does not give up its own being.'

As regards svabhāva Candrakīrti explains it following Nāgārjuna in his MV, pp. 264-265, that it is nothing but always non-origination (sarvadānutpāda eva). He says that by svabhāva we are to understand that which is independent of other (paranirapekṣa) and as such not artificial (akṛtrima) and thus having no existence before it does not come into being (not abhūtvā bhāvaḥ). Therefore the svabhāva of fire is nothing but its non-origination (anutpāda), and not its heat, because it depends on its cause and conditions, and comes into being after having no existence at first².

Now having shown that there is no origination of anything the author proceeds to say in the next kārika that there is also neither decay nor passing away :

10

jarāmarananirmuktāḥ sarve dharmāḥ svabhāvataḥ । jarāmarāṇaṃ icchantaś cyavante tanmanīṣayā ॥

'All things are by nature free from 'old age' (decay) and 'death' (passing away), So the persons who believe in 'old age' and 'death' are reborn owing to their that very thought.'

That there can be neither jarā nor marāṇa is very elaborately established by Nāgārjuna in his MK, XI. 3 ff. from which we cull the following two couplets (3 and 4):

pūrvaṃ jātir yadi bhavej jarāmarāṇaṃ uttaraṃ । nirjarāmarāṇā jātir bhavej jāyeta cāmṛtaḥ ॥ paścāj jātir yadi bhavej jarāmarāṇaṃ āditaḥ । ahetukam ajātasya syāj jarāmarāṇaṃ kathaṃ ॥

For further details readers are referred to the original text of Nāgārjuna with MV.

The author attacks the doctrine of jāti from different points of view and refutes it in the following way referring first to the followers of the Sāṃkhya system who hold the theory of actual existence of an effect in its cause (satkāryavāda).¹

11 kāraṇaṃ yasya vai kāryaṃ kāraṇaṃ tasya jāyate । jāyamānaṃ kathaṃ ajaṃ bhinnaṃ nityaṃ kathaṃ ca tat ॥

'(It is to be admitted by him) according to whom the cause itself is the effect, that it is the cause that takes birth (i.e., is

See notes on IV. 3 and SK, IX, produced). And in that case how is it that the thing takes birth and is thus different (from the effect) can be regarded as unborn (aja) and how it can be permanent ?¹

In the Sāṃkhya system prakṛti or pradhāna is held to be the first or original cause (mūla kāraṇa). It is 'unborn' (aja) and permanent (nitya). From it other things are gradually produced. This view is criticized in this and the following kārikās by our author.

¹ The point is that there must be some difference between that which is produced and that which is not produced (jāyamāna and aja).

Ś explains the word bhinna in a different way saying that it means 'broken asunder', 'divided into parts' or 'opened' (vidiṇa, sphuṭita) implying that the cause is 'subject to some change.' And that which admits of any kind of change cannot be permanent.

The identity of cause and effect may be viewed from two different points, viz., the cause is not other than the effect (kāryābhinnaṃ kāraṇaṃ), or the effect is not other than the cause (kāraṇābhinnaṃ kāryaṃ). But in neither case the Sāṃkhya system be defended, The object of the present viewpoint is shown in the present kārikā which says : If the cause is not different from the effect then it is to be admitted that it is the cause (and not the effect) that 'takes birth' (jāyate) and thus, if you accept it, the cause cannot be regarded as 'unborn' (aja), as you hold it to be.

Now, in order to avoid this difficulty one may follow the second point of view saying that the effect being not different from the cause the former is as aja as the latter ; and one cannot say that the cause is not aja. The author, however, says in the next kārikā that this argument, too, cannot be accepted :

kāraṇād yad¹ ananyatvam ataḥ kāryam ajaṃ yadi |
jāyamānād dhi vai kāryāt kāraṇam te katham dhruvam ||

'If you hold that the effect is also 'unborn' (aja), for there is no difference of it from the cause (which is aja), then, how is it, in your opinion, that the cause is permanent when the effect is produced?' ²

¹ The reading should be here yad and not yadi as discussed elsewhere.

² Ś explains c saying that how it is that the cause being not different from the effect, that is, being produced, can be permanent: jāyamānād dhi vai kāryāt kāraṇam ananyan nityam dhruvam ca.

The author offers further grounds :

ajād vai jāyate yasya dṛṣṭāntas tasya nāsti vai |
jātāc ca jāyamānasya na-vyavasthā prasajyate ||

'There is no illustration (to give) for him who holds that a thing is produced from what is unborn¹. (On the other hand, if it is maintained that) a thing is born from what is born, then there follows no finality, it leads to an endless series of causes (anavasthā).'

Here in the text in d na is to be taken with vyavasthā (as na-vyavasthā = avyavasthā = anavasthā) and not with prasajyate. Ś explains: na vyavasthā prasajyate anavasthānam syād ity arthaḥ.

The second half of the kārikā means that if A is produced from B which you take as produced (jāta), by the very fact that it is produced it must have been produced from one C, and C, too, in the same way must have been produced from one D, and so on. Thus it is impossible to ascertain the ultimate cause of a thing.²

² Cf. Candrakīrti (MV, p. 15): na ca vidyamānasya punar utpattiḥ prayojanaṃ paśyāmaḥ, anavasthāṃ ca paśyāmaḥ; AKV (quoted in MV, p. 15): utpannasya punar utpattau kalpyamānāyām anavasthāprasaṅgaḥ; MA (quoted in MV, p. 13): jātasya janma punar eva ca naiva juktam; ŚS, p. 262 (from ASP): kiṃ punar āyusman subhūte utpanno dharma utpatsyata utānutpanno subhūtir āha. nāham āyusman sārīputra utpannasya dharmasyotpattim icchāmi na cānutpannasyeti. CŚ, 260:

sambhavaḥ kriyate yasya prāk so'stīti na yujyate |
sato yadi bhaved janma jātasyāpi bhaved bhavaḥ ||

In support of this ajātivāda the author offers further arguments :

14

hetor ādiḥ phalaṃ yeṣāṃ ādir hetuḥ phalasya ca |
hetuḥ phalasya cānādiḥ katham tair upavarṇyate ||

'How can those who hold that the antecedent of an effect is its cause and the antecedent of an effect is its cause, describe that there is no beginning of the cause and the effect?'

In c anādi means 'absence of beginning' (āder abhāva). Ś explains it by anāditva. Cf. kṛtaka in IV. 8c.

Let us take here an example (IV. 20). As regards seed (bija) and its sprout (aṅkura) it is said that they have no beginning, for it cannot be ascertained as to whether the seed was first and then the sprout, or the sprout was first and then the seed, each of them being dependent on the other for their existence. Yet, they say that the antecedent of the sprout is the seed and that of the seed is sprout. This cannot be justified.

The point is further dealt with in the following kārikās :

hetor ādiḥ phalaṃ yeṣāṃ ādir hetuḥ phalasya ca ।
tathā janma bhavet teṣāṃ putrāj janma pitur yathā ॥

‘To those who maintain that the antecedent of a cause is its effect and the antecedent of an effect is its cause, the production of a thing would be just after the manner of the birth of a father from the son.’

The point is that if it is held that the antecedent of a cause is its effect and vice-versa, then it would follow from it that as a cause produces its effect, so an effect, too, produces its cause ; and if one accepts it one would also accept that a son begets his father. But it is absurd.

Cf. N ā g ā r j u n a in his ViV, 50 :

pitṛa yady utpādyah putro yadi tena caiva putreṇa । utpādyah sa yadi pitā vada tatrotpādayati kaḥ kam ॥

Here in the second half yadi, though supported by the Tibetan text, seems to be redundant.

See NS, II. I. 41, IV. I. 39; BA, IX. 114 :

pitā cen na vinā putrāt kutaḥ putrasya sambhavaḥ । putrābhāve pitā nāsti tathāsattvaṃ tayor dvayoḥ ॥

As regards the relationship between hetu ‘cause’ and phala ‘effect’ see MK, XX, specially XX. 20 :

ekatve phalahetvoḥ syād aikyaṃ janakajanyayoḥ । pṛthaktve phalahetoḥ syāt tulyo hetur ahetunā ॥

MV writes here : na cānayoḥ ekatvaṃ pitāputrayoḥ cakṣ cakṣurvijñānayoḥ bījāṅkurayoḥ ca aikyaprasaṅgāt.

The next kārikā says that there must be an order (kṛam) of a cause and its effect as to whether the cause or the effect precedes, otherwise there cannot be any relationship between them, and consequently nothing can be produced :

16

sambhave hetuphalayor eṣitavyaḥ kramas tvayā ।
yugapat sambhave yasmād asambandho viṣāṇavat ॥

‘As regards production (sambhava, i.e., jāti) you must determine an order of the cause and the effect; for, if they are simultaneous they cannot be related (to each other), as the horns (of an animal).’

This argument is found in Buddhist works as shown below. As regards the production of an effect by its cause only three orders are possible, and not more. For, it may be said that first there is the cause and then the effect (pūrva-kṛama ‘prior order’); or it may be said that first there is the effect and then the cause (apara-kṛama ‘posterior order’); or, again, it may be said that the cause and the effect are simultaneous (sahakṛama ‘order of simultaneity’). But it is clearly shown that none of them can be justified. Says N ā g ā r j u n a, MK, XI. 2 :

jarāmaraṇādīnāṃ pūrvāparasahakramā api na santityāha.

The following may be quoted here from MK, XI. 3-5 :

pūrvam jātir yadi bhaved jarāmaraṇam uttaram । nirjarāmaraṇa jātir bhaved jāyeta cāmṛtaḥ ॥ paścā jātir yadi bhaved jarāmaraṇam āditaḥ । ahetukam ajātasya syāj jarāmaraṇam katham ॥ na jarāmaraṇenaiva jātiś ca saha yujyate । mriyeta jāyamānaś ca syāc cāhetukatobhayaḥ ॥

Op. cit. XI. 6 :

yatra na prabhavantiyete pūrvāparasahakramāḥ |

For details the reader is referred to the whole of the chapters XI and XII.

In the kārikā under discussion Gauḍapāda referring to the krama of cause and effect refutes their simultaneity saying exactly what is said by Nāgārjuna (MK, XX. 7) and his commentator Candrakīrtti :

phalaṃ sahaiva sāmagryā yadi prādurbhavet punaḥ |
ekakālau prasajyete janako yaś ca jāyate ||

‘Should an effect come into existence just with its cause in its entirety then that which produces and that which is produced become simultaneous.’

Here Candrakīrtti adds : na caikakālayoḥ saṃyetagoviṣṇayor janyajanakatvaṃ dṛṣṭaṃ vāmadakṣiṇakarayoś caraṇayor vā. ‘But it is not seen that between two simultaneous things there is any such relation as between the producer (janaka) and the produced (janya), just like between the right and left hands or feet.’²

This order of cause and effect has again been referred to later on (IV. 19) by the word kramaḥ ‘incompatibility of order.’³

² Sometimes the female breasts are cited as example in such cases.

³ See Candrakīrtti (MV, XI. 7-8) : tatra yadi pūrvam kāraṇam paścāt kāryam syād akāryakam kāraṇam nirhetukam syāt. atha pūrvam kāryam paścāt kāraṇam evam api kāraṇāt pūrvam kāryam nirhetukam eva syāt. atha yugapat kāryakāraṇe syātām evam ubhayam apy a[hetu]kam syāt.

Now, according to these three orders (krama) of cause and effect there may be three propositions respectively, viz.
(i) the cause produces its effect, (ii) the effect produces cause; and (iii) the cause and its effect produce each other.
Of these three propositions the second² is taken up in the following kārikā :

17

phalād utpadyamānaḥ san na te hetuḥ prasidhyati |
aprasiddhaḥ katham hetuḥ phalam utpādayisyati ||²

‘Your cause coming into being from the effect cannot come into existence ; how will, therefore, the cause that has not come into existence produce the effect ?’

The argument of our author seems to have been based on what Nāgārjuna has said (MK, X. 10):

yo 'pekṣya sidhyate bhāvas tam evāpekṣya sidhyati |
yadi yo 'pekṣitavyaḥ sa sidhyatām kam apekṣya kaḥ ||

specially the following line (MV, p. 395, ll. 5-6) : yady evam phalasya heutpattau doṣa evam sati sahotpannaiva sāmagrī phalasya janikāstu tad yapradipaprabhāyāḥ.

² It appears that a kārikā dealing with the first proposition is now between kārikās 16 and 17. For, as the second and third propositions discussed (IV. 17, 18), one may naturally expect to have the discussion of of the first proposition, but it is not to be found. Can we think that author himself has omitted it?

Candrakīrtti explains it thus (MV, p. 208) :

tatra yadi yo 'gnyākhyo bhāvo yam indhanākhyam bhāvam apekṣya sidhyati, indhanākhyas ca bhāvo yo 'gnināmasiddhya-rtham apekṣitavyaḥ, sa yadi tam evāgnyākhyam padārtham apekṣya sidhyati, kathyatām idāniṃ sidhyatām kam apekṣya ka iti. yadā cāgnyabhāve satindhanasya siddhir eva nāsti tadākāraṇasyendhanasyābhāvāt kutas taddhetuko 'gniḥ prasetsyati.

It says that if the fire is effected having regard to its fuel and the fuel is effected having regard to the fire, neither of them can be effected. See also the next kārīkā (MK, X. 11) :

yo 'pekṣya sidhyate bhāvaḥ so 'siddho 'pekṣate katham |
athāpy apekṣate siddhas tv apekṣasya na yujyate ||

Mark here the use of the root √sidh with or without the prefix pra- by Gauḍapāda, Nāgārjuna and Candrakīrtti.

This point is further discussed in the following kārīkā :

18

yadi hetoḥ phalāt siddhiḥ phalasiddhiś ca hetutaḥ |
katarat pūrvam utpannam yasya siddhir apekṣayā ||

'If the coming into being of the cause is from the effect and that of the effect is from the cause, which (of the two) has first come into being,—the coming into being of which is dependent?'

Read here the following quoted from Nāgārjuna's MK, X. 8 :

yadindhanam apekṣyāgnir apekṣyāgniṃ yadindhanam |
katarat pūrvaniṣpannam yadapekṣyāgnir indhanam ||

MV (p. 207) runs here as follows :

asyendhanasyāyam agnir dāhakaḥ kartety evaṃ yadindhanam apekṣyāgnir vyavasthāpyate, asyāgner idam indhanam karmety-evam agnim apekṣya yadindhanam, tat katarad anayoḥ pūrvāniṣpannam. kim indhanam yad apekṣyāgniḥ syāt, utāgnir yam apekṣyendhanam syāt.

The author proceeds to show very clearly in the next kārīkā as to how the Buddhas have explained the theory of ajāti 'non-origination' :

19

aśaktir aparijñānam kramakopo 'tha vā punaḥ |
evaṃ hi sarvathā buddhair ajātiḥ paridīpitā ||

'As there is absence of capability, or complete ignorance, or, again, incompatibility of orders, the Buddhas elucidated (the theory of) absolute non-origination (ajāti)'.

Against the theory of jāti there are given three reasons in the present kārīkā, viz., (i) aśakti 'absence of capability', (ii) aparijñāna 'complete ignorance', and (iii) kramakopa 'incompatibility of orders'. Of these three the third, i.e., kramakopa has already been discussed in kārīkā 16.¹ But what do the other two terms aśakti and aparijñāna signify? The answer will be found in Buddhist works. In regard to aśakti

¹ On this as well as on aśakti (asāmarthya) one may be referred to the kṣaṇabhāṅga-vāda in the Buddhist section of the SDS.

refers to IV. 3 where two classes of teachers are mentioned, one holding satkāryavāda and the other asatkāryavāda. It has already been shown (IV. 4) that the Buddhists subscribe to neither of these two views. Nāgārjuna says (MK, I. 6), as has once already been quoted :

naivāsato naiva sataḥ pratyayo 'rthasya yujyate |
asataḥ pratyayaḥ kasya sataś ca pratyayena kim ||

It says that one cannot be a cause of either an existent or a non-existent thing, for, how is it that there is a cause of a thing which is not in existence? And what is the use of a cause of that which is already existent?

The opponent may say here : Well, when we speak of the cause of a non-existent thing we thereby mean to say that the cause is of a future thing. Candrakīrtti replies (MV. on MK, I. 6) to it by quoting the following half of a verse in his MA (VI. 58) which is now available only in its Tibetan version edited by Poussin in BB (IX) :

bhaviṣyātā ced vyavahāra iṣṭaḥ
śaktim vinā nāsti hi bhāvitāsyā | ²

It means that if you want to say that the cause is of a future thing, then owing to the want of energy that thing cannot come into being.

² In Tibetan

gal. te. ḥbyuñ. bar. ḥgyur. bas. besñad. ḥdod. na |
nus. pa. med. par. ḥdi.yi. ḥbyuñ. ḥgyur. med |

The other half of the verse in Tibetan runs:

phan. tshun. don. la. brten. paḥi. grub. pa. ni |
grub. min. ñid. ces. dam. pa. rñams. kyis. gsuñs ||

It may be translated into Sanskrit as follows:

parasparārthāśrayiṇī ca siddhiḥ |
siddhir bhaven neti hi sadbhīr uktam||

The point here is this that in the coming into being of anything there must be some śakti 'energy', otherwise everything is possible from everything, or nothing is possible from anything. But the existence of such a śakti cannot be established. For, as discussed by Candrakīrtti in his MA, VI. 57, it cannot be said that the śakti belongs to a thing that has come into being (jāta), or to one that has not yet come into being (ajāta).³

I think this śakti is referred to here by Gaṇḍapāda in his present kārikā.

Now aparījñāna in the kārikā seems to me to be nothing but pūrvāparāparījñāna 'absolute ignorance of the first and last (points)' in kārikā IV.21. And this pūrvāparāparījñāna is in reality pūrvāparaḥṣṭi-aparījñāna, that is, absolute ignorance of the first and last points, i.e., the beginning and the end of the world as well as anything in it. To this theme a whole chapter (XI) is devoted in the MK, owing to which it is called pūrvāparaḥṣṭi-parīkṣā 'the Examination of the First and the Last Points.' Let here be quoted the first kārikā of it (XI. 1) :

pūrvā prajñāyate koṭīr nety uvāca mahāmuniḥ |
saṃsāro 'navarāgro hi nāsyādir nāpi paścimaṃ ||

'The great sage said that the first point (of the world) is not known, for it is without the first and last points owing to the fact that it has neither the beginning nor the end.'

Candrakīrtti comments : koṭīr bhāgo deśa iti paryāyāḥ. pūrvā koṭiḥ pūrvō deśa ity arthaḥ. yadi hi saṃsāro nāma kaścit

³ skyes. la. nus. pa. srid. pa. yod. ma. yin |
ma. skyes. ño. bo. laḥaṇ nus. yod. min. ni |

The Sanskrit rendering in prose may be : jāte śaktir na sambhavatī, ajātasvabhāve' pi śaktir nāsti.

syāt niyataṃ tasya pūrvam api syāt paścimam api ghaṭādinām iva. uktaṃ ca bhagavatā anavarāgro hi bhikṣavo jātijārā-maraṇasaṃsāra iti.⁴ tasmān nāsti saṃsāraḥ pūrvāparakoṭyanupalambhād alātacakravād iti sthitaṃ.

It is to be noted here that pūrvāparakoṭyaparijñāna (or °koṭyanupalambha) is not only of the world, but also of everything. So says N ā g ā r j u n a (MK. XI. 8):

pūrvā na vidyate koṭiḥ saṃsārasya na kevalaṃ |
sarveṣāṃ api bhāvānāṃ pūrvā koṭir na vidyate ||

'It is not only of the world, but also of every thing that there is no existence of the first point.'

N ā g ā r j u n a proceeds to say (MK, XI. 2) :

naivāgraṃ nāvaram yasya tasya madhyaṃ kuto bhavet |

'How is it that that which has no beginning nor the end should have the middle?'

And the very thing is said also by our author (II, 6, IV. 31) :

ādāy ante ca yan nāsti vartamāne 'pi tat tathā |⁵

'That which is not in the beginning, nor in the end, is so⁶ also in the present.'

See IV, 31

⁴ See DA, p. 197, l. 5; SN, Vol. II, pp. 178, 193, Vol. III, pp. 149, 151, MP, II. 3. 2 (pp. 50-51); KV, I. 1. 159.

⁵ ādāvante ca yan nāsti madhye 'pi tat tathā.

Nayopadeśa, 14.

jassa n'atthi purā pacchā majjham tassa kuo siyā.

ĀS, 4.4.1.3.

It is not also in the middle, as says Ś (tan madhye 'pi nāstīti).

It has been shown before that causation (hetuphalabhāva) in cases of origination is not possible. But one may meet the objection offering the example of seed and sprout (bija and aṅkura). For it is evident that a sprout comes into being from a seed and a seed from a sprout. There is an endless series of it, yet the fact cannot be denied. Thus by dint of this example causation is established. The author, however, says that the example does not establish any causation, though it may appear to do so, according to you. Therefore until it is established to the satisfaction of both the parties this example cannot be cited. Thus he says :

20

bijāṅkurākhyo dṛṣṭāntaḥ sadā sādhyasamo hi naḥ |
na ca sādhyasamo hetuḥ siddhau sādhyasya yujyate

'To us the illustration of a seed and its sprout is always like a thing that is yet to be proved (sādhyasama). And for reason (hetu) which is like one that is yet to be proved (sādhyasama) cannot be used for establishing a thing question'.

Nāgārjuna has discussed (MK, X) the point thoroughly taking the example of fire and fuel (agni-indhana) and has arrived at the conclusion that there cannot be any causation (hetuphalabhāva) of anything. Let us cite here only the following few lines from this work :

yad indhanaṃ sa ced agnir ekatvaṃ kartṛkarmaṇoḥ |
anyaś ced indhanād agnir indhanād apy ṛte bhavet ||

nityapradipta eva syād apradīpanahetukaḥ |
punar ārambhavaiyarthyaṃ evaṃ cākṛ mākaḥ satī || X. 1

agnindhanābhyāṃ vyākhyāta ātmopādānayoḥ kramāḥ |
sarvo niravaśeṣeṇa sārddhaṃ ghaṭapaṭadibhiḥ || X. 15.

Candra-kīrtti says on CS, IX.8: tasmād evaṃ hetu-phalabhāvavyavasthābhāvād dvayam api (hetu and phala) svarūpeṇa na sidhyati.¹

sādhyasama hetu is one of the fallacies of a reason (hetvābhāsa). It is an assertion identical with the point to be proved, petitio principii. See NS, I. 2. 4, 8; V. 1. 4.

The word hetu has been used here in the kārika in the sense of dṛṣṭānta, as says S.

¹ The Sanskrit text has not yet been discovered hence it is reconstructed (see my edition) from the Tibetan version which runs: deḥi. phyir. de. ltar. na. rgyu. dañ. ḥbras. bu. dños. po. rnam. par. gnas. pa. med. paḥi. phyir. gñi. ga. rañ. gi. ño. bos. grub. pas. yod. pa. ma. yin. no || See also the kārikā and MA, p. 150.

The opponent says referring to kārika IV. 19 :

pūrvāparāparijñānam ajāteḥ paridīpakam |
jāyamānād dhi vai dharmāt katham pūrvam na grīhyate ||

‘The absolute ignorance of the first and the last (points of a thing) is elucidator of non-origination; but how is it that the first (point) is not known (of a thing) which actually comes into being?’

The word pūrvāparāparijñāna has already (IV. 19) been explained.

To the question raised above the author gives his reply in the following kārikā actually in the words of Nāgārjuna and his followers :

svato vā parato vāpi na kiñcid vastu jāyate |
sad asat sadasad vāpi na kiñcid vastu jāyate ||

‘Nothing is produced either from itself or from other than itself, nor is anything produced which is existent, non-existent, or both existent and non-existent’¹

The author wants to say here that should there be a thing that originates (jāyate) one may say that it has its first point (pūrva koṭi), i.e., the state of its becoming or being produced, but in reality there is nothing of the kind. For the first half of the kārikā see Nāgārjuna :

na svato jāyate bhāvaḥ parato naiva jāyate |
na svataḥ parataś caiva jāyate jāyate kutaḥ ||²

MK, XXI. 13, see also XXIII. 20.

‘A thing comes into being neither from itself, nor from another, nor from both, itself and another; and that being the case, how can it come into being at all?’

na svato nāpi parato na dvābhyāṃ nāpyahetutaḥ |
utpannā jātu vidyante bhāvāḥ kvacana kecana||

Op. cit, I. 1.

‘There are nowhere and never such things as are produced either from themselves or from others, or from both, or from one that is no cause at all.’

¹ Here the point ‘not existent-and-non-existent (na sad-asad)’ may also be added. See IV. 83.

² Quoted in BAP, p. 339, and SS. p. 18.

For the second half of the kārikā the reader is referred to the following line of Nāgārjuna (MK, I.7) :

na san nāsan na sadasan dharmo nirvartate yadā |
kathaṃ nirvartako hetur evaṃ sati hi yujyate ||³

‘When nothing existent, non-existent, or both existent and non-existent, comes into being, how is it reasonable to say that a cause brings about a thing?’

³ See:

na san nāsan na sadasan na cāpyanubhayātmakam |
catuṣkoṭiviniṃkṛtaṃ tattvaṃ mādhyaṃikā viduḥ||

This couplet is attributed to Saraha pāda in SS, p. 15 and found in a book Jñānasārasamuccaya, 28. The original Sanskrit of this work is not yet found, but there is a Tibetan version (Tanjur, Mdo, Tsh; Cordir. III, p. 29). Here the authorship of the original book is attributed to Āryadeva. In Tibetan it is called Ye.śes.sñiṃ.po.kun.las.btus.pa. The present kārikā is quoted in BAP, p. 359, and many other books both Buddhist and non-Buddhist. In this connection see IV. 83-84, and atas tattvaṃ sadasadubhayānubhayātmakacatuṣkoṭiviniṃkṛtaṃ śūnyam eva in SDS (Buddhism section). Bib. Ind., 1858, p. 14.

The next kārikā is a reply to those who maintain the theory of origination (jātivāda) on the ground of the rule of cause and effect (hetuphalavyavasthā) saying that both of them are without a beginning and as such cannot come into existence :

ādir na vidyate yasya tasya jātir na vidyate ||¹

¹ All the MSS. utilized for the Anandasram editions as well as those (not less than sixteen) collected from different provinces and examined by myself including different extant editions read 'nādeḥ for nādiḥ in a and hy ādir for jātir in d. With these original readings the kārikā hardly gives any appreciable sense. What does the second half with that reading (ādir na vidyate yasya tasya hy ādir na vidyate) mean? With the reading jātir for hyādir suggested by me the sense is quite clear and it is in one way supported by the explanation given by the commentator, Ś, who has twisted the text with the reading hy ādiḥ saying:

‘A cause as well as an effect having no beginning does not naturally come into being, for that which has no beginning has no origination.’

Compare BC, IX. 123 :

hetor ādir na ced asti phalasyādiḥ kuto bhavet |

‘Should there be no beginning of a cause how could an effect have a beginning?’

yasmād ādiḥ kāraṇaṃ na vidyate yasya loke tasya ādiḥ pūrvoktā jātir na vidyate. The reason for suggesting 'nādiḥ for 'nādeḥ is this that by doing so the meaning becomes quite clear and only as such is supported by the second half of the kārikā.

Now, a few words are necessary to introduce the words prajñapti and saṃkleśa in the next kārikā. We say ‘It is a tree’, and by saying so we affirm the existence of the tree. We know thereby that in reality there is a thing which is called ‘tree.’ But some thinkers including a class of Buddhists would utterly deny the existence of such a thing. According to them there is nothing that can be called a tree. That which is known to us as a tree is nothing but a mere understanding (saṃkhyā), a designation (saṃjñā); it is only making known to others (prajñapti), that is, the practical denomination simply a common use (vyavahāra), it is merely a name (nāman) and nothing else. And it is only on account of its having the branches, the leaves etc., that it comes under the generally understood term of ‘tree.’ Similarly there is nothing in fact like a branch, a leaf, and so on, it being merely a current term, an enumeration, a designation, an expression of a distinctive mark of discourse.¹

¹ DS, § 1308 (see Buddhist Psychology, pp. 340-341): katame dhammā paññatti. yā tesam tesam dhammānaṃ sankhā samaññā paññatti voharo nāma nāmakammaṃ nāmadhēyaṃ nirutti vyañjanaṃ abhilāpo. Compare the theory against that of what is known as Avayavivāda, BA with BAP, IX. seq. and ASP, p. 97. There is also a small separate treatise entitled Avaya

The true literal significance of the word prajñapti, 'practical denomination', is 'making known' (bhāvasādhana); or 'that by which a thing is made known' (kaṛaṇasādhana), i.e., name or term. Or, again, it may mean what is made known (kaṛmasādhana).² In the present case the word is used in either of the first two senses.

On the use of the word prajñapti in Buddhist works Kumāṛila's observation (TV, I. 3. 12, p. 234) is interesting: śākyādigrantheṣu punar yadapi kiñcit sādhuśabdābhiprāyeṇāvināṣtabuddhyā prayuktaṃ tatrāpi prajñapti-vijñapti-paśyatā-tiṣṭhatādiprāyaprayogāt kiñcid evāviplutaṃ labhyate. kim uta yāni prasiddhāpabhraṣṭadeśabhāṣābhyo 'py apabhraṣṭatarāṇi bhikkhave ityevamādinī. See here its Tīkā Nyāyasudhā.

As regards saṃkleśa it has also a special sense in Buddhist works. It is well-known in Buddhist literature along with its opposite term vyavadāna. They mean 'impurity and purification' respectively. See BA with BAP, IX. 28. By impurity the mind (citta) becomes impure and by purification it becomes pure. This saṃkleśa is threefold: (1) kleśa 'passion' (i.e., rāga, dveṣa and moha), that can be avoided by right view (darśana) and meditation (bhāvanā); (2) kaṛman 'act,' bad (akuśala), and good-impure (kuśalāsrava); and (3) janman 'birth' (or phala 'fruit', recompense that projects the existence). See Vis, pp. 214 ff. Let the following be quoted here from Tk, p. 28 :

tatra kleśakarmajanmātmakas trividhaḥ saṃkleśaḥ.

nirākaṛaṇa by Pandita Aśoka in the Six Buddhist Nyāya Tracts, Bib. Ind., pp. 78 ff. The well-known 'Chariot Simile' in the Milindapañha, pp. 27 ff. (II. I. 1) may also be referred to here. The Avayavivāda is established among others in the following works of Brahmanic authority: NS, II. 1. 33 ff., PB with NK on VSt., pp. 41 ff.

² Ash, § 107 paññatti pana paññāpiyattā (Skt. prajñāpyatvāt) paññatti. paññāpanato (Skt. prajñāpanataḥ) vā paññattitī ca duvidhā hoti. Thus the first is kaṛmasādhana and the second bhāvasādhana,

The following occurs in MSBT, pp. 34-35 :

[kleśa eva saṃkleśa iti kleśa]saṃkleśaḥ. evaṃ karma [saṃkleśo] janmasaṃkleśaḥ. kleśo hi pravartamānaḥ svaparāmanor vyābādhakatvāt saṃkleśaḥ. yathoktaṃ sūtre³ rakto hārāgarita ātmavyābādhāyāpi cetayate paravyābādhāyāpi cetayate ubhayavyābādhāyāpi cetayate. evaṃ dveṣamohayor apyāpi jñātavyam iti. karma janma ca saṃkleśapravartanād apyasaṃkleśaḥ.

³ This is, as pointed out by S. Yamaguchi, from AN, III. 54.

Now, the opponent having his hold on the meaning of the word prajñapti as well as saṃkleśa well-known among and accepted by, Vijñānavādins, who maintain that there is in fact, only vijñāna and the external word has no reality at all, proceeds to refute their views, the purpose thereof being that if the existence of external things is once established one will have to accept their jāti, too.

The kārikā runs thus:

prajñapteḥ sanimittatvam anyathā dvayanāśataḥ |
saṃkleśasyopalabdheś ca paratantrāstītā matā ||

'The practical denomination (prajñapti) has its (objective) cause (nimitta),¹ for otherwise there is the disappearance of the two; (owing to this fact) as well as the experience of impurities (saṃkleśa-upalabdhi) (their) existence is regarded as dependent (paratantra).²

It says that it must be admitted that prajñapti must have its nimitta; i.e., the objective cause; for otherwise there will be no notion of the (dvaya)³, i.e., grāhya and grāhaka 'the percipient and the perceptible,' in other words, the subject and the object,—a fact that cannot be denied. And, again, owing to saṃkleśa-upalabdhi it is also to be admitted that there must be some things (for example, as the Buddhists would say, śkandhas, dhātus, āyatanas) that are the causes of these saṃkleśas. Thus the things to which the prajñapti and the saṃkleśa-upalabdhi owe their existence are external and have their origination (jāti).

The argument advanced here has two parts: first, owing to the existence of prajñapti the existence of its cause, too, is to be admitted; and second, as there is the experience of saṃkleśas there must be also their cause. Both the parts of the argument are taken from Buddhist works. As regards the first let us quote here a few lines from the LA, p. 104 :

punar aparaṃ mahāmatir āha. nanu bhagavann abhilāpa-sadbhāvāt santi sarvabhāvāḥ. yadi punar bhagavan bhāvā na syur abhilāpo na pravartate, pravartate ca. tasmād abhilāpasadbhāvād bhagavan santi sarvabhāvāḥ. bhagavān āha. asatām api mahāmate bhāvānām abhilāpaḥ kriyate yad uta śaśaviṣṇākūrmarmabandhyāputrādīnām loke dṛṣṭo⁴ 'bhilāpaḥ. te ca mahāmate na bhāvā nābhāvā abhilapyante ca. tad yad avocas tvam mahāmate abhilāpasadbhāvāt santi sarvabhāvā iti sa hi vādaḥ prahīṇaḥ.

² For the word paratantra see IV. 24, 73, 74.

⁴ The printed text reads 'dṛṣṭo' which is evidently wrong.

"M a h ā m a t i says again : 'Is it not, O Blessed One, that all beings exist, for they all have their expressions (abhilāpa). If, O Blessed One, there exist no beings there cannot be their expressions. Therefore, all beings exist on account of their expressions.' Says the Blessed One : 'There are, O M a h ā m a t i, expressions also for those which are non-existent, for example, the horn of a hare, the hair of a tortoise, the son of a barren woman, and so on. These are O M a h ā m a t i, neither beings, nor non-beings, yet they are expressed. Therefore, O M a h ā m a t i, the theory, as you say, that owing to expressions all beings exist, is lost.'"⁵

The following couplet from the same work (LA. p. 105) supplies the gist of the above :

ākāśaṃ śaśaśṛṅgaṃ ca bandhyāyāḥ putra eva ca |
asanto hy abhilapyante tathā bhāveṣu kalpanā ||

It is quoted in MV, p. 528, where occurs the following :

tatrāpi bhāvakalpanāpratiśedhamātraṃ nābhāvakalpanā bhāvatvāsiddher eveti vijñeyaṃ. bandhyāputra iti śabdāmātram evaitat. nāsyārtha upalabhyate yasyārthasya bhāvatvam abhāvatvam vā syād iti kuto 'nupalabhyamānasvabhāvasya bhāvābhāvakalpanā yokṣyate.

The following is taken also from LA, p. 319 (X. 430):

asatsu sarvadharmeṣu prajñaptiḥ kriyate mayā |
abhilāpo vyavahāraś ca bālānām tattvarajitaḥ ||

It is to be noted that abhilāpa and prajñapti are synonymous with each other. See DSṇ, § 1308, quoted above, p. 129.

⁵ See III. 37 : sarvābhilāpavigataḥ.

Now, as regards the second part we should like to quote a few lines also from a Buddhist work. Candrakīrti introduces the sixth chapter of the MK thus (MV, p. 137) :

atrāha. vidyata eva skandhā[yatana]dhātavaḥ. kutaḥ tadāśrayasaṃkleśopalabdheḥ. iha yan nāsti na tadā[śraya]saṃkleśopalabdhir asti bandhyāduhitur iva bandhyāsūnoḥ. santi ca rāgādayaḥ kleśāḥ saṃkleśanibandhanam.

'Here (the opponent) says: "Verily there are the skandhas,⁶ *āyatana*s,⁷ and dhātus.⁸ Why? Because there is experience of saṃkleśas arising from them ; and because, on the other hand, there is no experience of saṃkleśas arising from that which has no existence, as of a barren woman's daughter from a barren woman's son." ' And there are attachment and other passions, the cause of saṃkleśa.

With regard to prajñāpti the following may also be quoted in this connexion :

prajñāptir nāmamātreyam⁹ lakṣmaṇena na vidyate |
LA, X. 23 (p. 267).

prajñāptimātram tribhavam nāsti vastu svabhāvataḥ |
prajñāptim vastubhāvena kalpayiṣyanti tārīkākāḥ||

Op. cit, X. 86 (p. 275).

Now the author proceeds to give his reply to the above prima facie case :

⁶ Five: rūpa, vedanā, saṃjñā, saṃskāra, and vijñāna.

⁷ Twelve: six organs of sense and their objects, viz., six internal: eye, ear, nose, tongue, body, and mind ; and six external : form, sound, odour, taste, contact and ideas.

⁸ Eighteen: six organs of sense, their six objects, and six kinds of consciousness arising from them.

⁹ Calcutta ed. has prajñāptināmamātreḍam.

prajñāpteḥ sanimittatvam iṣyate yuktidarśanāt |
nimittasyānimittatvam iṣyate bhūtarśanāt ||

' Seeing the reason (advanced above) one wants (to say) that the prajñāpti has its nimitta ; but seeing the reality (we) want (to say) that the nimitta is no nimitta at all. '

The opponent says, as we have seen, prajñāpti must have its objective cause, but the argument drawn from the real nature of things points to the conclusion that what is called by him a nimitta (cause) is in reality no nimitta at all. The reason hereof is advanced in the following kārikā :

cittaṃ na saṃsprṣatyartham nārthābhāsam tathaiva ca |
abhūto hi yataś cārtho nārthābhāsaḥ tataḥ pṛthak ||

'The mind does not touch (i.e. relate itself to) an object. nor does its appearance (arthābhāsa), for the object is unreal and its appearance is not different from it. '

The mind has no contact with its object owing to the absence of the object itself. For in this theory (of the Vijñānavādins) there is nothing but the mind (citta). Now it goes without saying that the mind having no contact with its object has in fact no contact also with its appearance (arthābhāsa). The second half of the kārikā offers the reason hereof. It means that the object is unreal and it being so its appearance which depends on it is also unreal ; and thus both of them being unreal the latter is in this respect not different from the former. This being the case the mind can in no way be related either to its object or its appearance. Therefore it cannot be said, as done in the first half of the preceding kārikā, that prajñāpti has its nimitta. One must remember here that according to the Vijñānavādins there is no reality of external things. Let us read here the following from the MVBT, p. 10:

[°athavā cittacaitasikā rūpato dravyataś ca santiti yeṣāṃ dṛṣṭis teṣāṃ pratiśedhārtham uktam] abhūtaparikalpo[°stīti]. [tasmād] asti dravyataḥ. nāsti rūpaṃ tadvyatiriktaṃ. [nāsti] dravyata iti. kiṃ kārāṇaṃ. yasmād dvayaṃ tatra na vidyate. na hy abhūtaparikalpaḥ kasyacid grāhako nāpi kenacid grhyate. kiṃ tarhi. grāhyagrāhakatva [rahitaṃ vastumātraṃ. tathā hi vijñānād bahir na rūpādi grhyate svapnādivat vijñānaṃ hi rūpādyā] bhāsam utpadyate. tasmān nirabalambanam eva svapnādāv ivānyatrāpi svabijaparipākād arthābhāsaṃ vijñānam utpadyata ity eva jñeyam, grāhyā[bhāve grāhako na bhavatīti grāhyābhāve grāhakābhāvo na yujyate. ato rūpaṃ abhūtaparikalpān na pṛthagbhūtaṃ].

The opponent may argue here: Well, according to you there are no external things. But you cannot deny that there is an appearance of things round us. It may be a false one in your opinion. Yet, it must have some cause. What is it? It is nothing but the contact of the mind with an object. Thus even for a false notion or impression (viparyāsa) the existence of an object must be postulated.

The author rejoins that it is quite true that even false impressions are possible only when there is a contact of the mind with an object, but when that contact itself is never and in no way possible there is no possibility also of them. How to explain, then, the false impressions? He would reply that it is the nature of the mind itself that even in the absence of any object it transforms into various objects under the influence of vāsanās. For it is the seed of all (sarvabīja) having possessed the power of producing everything. Says Sthiramati (Tk, p. 36, l. 7 on kārikā 17: sarvabījaṃ hi vijñānam):

tatra sarvadharmotpādanaśaktyanugamāt sarvabījam.

LA, X. 49 (p. 271) :

cittaṃ vicitraṃ bijākhyam khyāyate cittagocaram |
khyātau kalpenti utpattiṃ bālāḥ kalpadvaye ratāḥ ||

Proceeds our author :

27

nimittaṃ na sadā cittaṃ saṃsprśaty adhvasu triṣu |
animitto viparyāsaḥ kathaṃ tasya bhaviṣyati ||

'Never in the three divisions of time (i.e., the past, the present, and the future) the mind touches any cause (object), how is it then that a false impression would arise without any cause thereof ?'

See IV. 41, 77, 78; LA, X. 123 :

viparyāsasya vastutvād yad yad evopalabhyate |
niḥsvabhāvaṃ bhavet tad dhi sarvathāpi na vidyate ||

That in the above kārikās (25-27) the doctrine of the Vijñānavādins is supported by our author is clearly admitted by Ś in the following words introducing the next kārikā (28) :

prajñāpteḥ sanimittatvam ityādy etadantaṃ vijñānavādinō bauddhasya vacanaṃ bāhyārthavādipakṣapratīśedhaparam ācāryeṇānumoditam.

Now the Ācārya draws his conclusion from what is said above in this connexion :

28

tasmān na jāyate cittaṃ cittadṛśyaṃ na jāyate |
tasya paśyanti ye jātiṃ khe vai paśyanti te padam ||

'Hence neither the mind (citta), nor that which is cognizable by it (cittadṛśya) is originated. Those who see its (i.e., of the citta and cittadṛśya) origination see the (foot-) mark (of birds) in the sky.'

'Hence (tasmāt)' refers to the reason advanced above in 26 and 27: because there is no contact of the mind with any object.

The belief in the origination of things is as absurd as the seeing of foot-marks of birds flying in the sky.

For this simile compare DP, 93 (= TG, 92):

ākāse va sakuntānaṃ padaṃ tassa durannayaṃ |

This simile in our kārikā can be better explained by what Buddha ghoṣa has said in his DPA on the above line:

padaṃ tassa durannayan'ti yathā ākāse gacchantānaṃ sakuntānaṃ imassim ṭhāne pādehi akkamitvā gatā idaṃ ṭhānaṃ udarena pahāritvā gatā idaṃ sisena idaṃ pakkhehiti na sakkā ñātum evam eva'

It says with reference to an Arhat that as in the case of birds flying in the sky it cannot be ascertained that they have gone away stepping on this spot with the legs and striking this spot with the wings, just so...

A similar verse is quoted by Ś in IV. 91. It runs:

śakunānāṃ ivākāse gatiṃ naivopalabhyate |

Cf. DP, 92:

ākāse'va sakuntānaṃ gatiṃ tesāṃ durannayā |

The following is quoted by Ś in his commentary on MU, III. 2. 6:

śakunināmivākāse jale vāricarasya ca |
padaṃ yathā na dṛśyeta tathā jñānavatāṃ gatiḥ ||

On such texts is based the following observation of Ś in his commentary on the BU, IV. 4. 6 (p. 637):

ta utsahante khe' pi śākunaṃ padaṃ draṣṭum.

For further details see IV. 91.

As regards the main proposition here the following lines from Āryaratnacūḍaparipṛcchā (quoted in BAP, IX. 18, p. 392; MV, p. 62; ŚS, p. 235) deserve to be cited:

sa cittaṃ parigaveṣamāṇo nādhyātmaṃ cittaṃ samanupaśyati na bahirdhā cittaṃ samanupaśyati.^o sa cittamasamanupaśyati cittadhārāṃ paryeṣate kutaś cittasyotpattir iti. tasyevaṃ bhavati ālambane sati cittaṃ utpadyate. tat kim anyad ālambanam anyac cittaṃ. tadā dvicittatā bhaviṣyati. atha yadevālambanam tad eva cittaṃ. tat kathaṃ cittena cittaṃ samanupaśyati. na ca cittaṃ cittaṃ samanupaśyati. tad yathāpi nāma tayaivā sidhārāyā saivāsiddhārā na śakyate chettum. na tenaivāṅgulya greṇa tad evāṅgulyagraṃ śakyate spraṣṭum. evam eva na tenaiva cittena tad eva cittaṃ śakyam draṣṭum."

² On citta see the work, pp. 142-150.

Having shown that the citta does not originate the Ācārya comes to his main thesis, the theory of ajāti 'non-origination.' Says he :

29

ajātaṃ jāyate yasmād ajātiḥ prakṛtis tataḥ |
prakṛter anyathābhāvo na kathañcid bhaviṣyati ||

'As it is one unborn (ajāta) that is born (jāta), non-birth (ajāti) is its very essence (prakṛti). And there can be in no way any change of essence.'

For a see jāta eva na jāyate, BU, III. 9, 25 ; and ante ajātasyaiva dharmasya jātim icchanti vādināḥ, III. 20, IV. 6 ; and note on IV. 13.

If a man is born it must be said that before his birth he was unborn, and this state of being unborn before the birth is his essence. Now, if it is accepted, and it must be accepted, as his essence, there cannot be his birth which is a change, for essence can in no way change, as essence and change are two contradictory terms. Similarly before a citta is produced it must be considered as unproduced, and that being its essence which can never change it cannot be produced at all. This law holds good wherever there is the question of jāti.

For the wording of the second half of the kārikā which is found also in III. 21 see MK. XV. 8 :

prakṛter anyathābhāvo nahi jātūpapadyate.

On this point one may be referred to also :

kasya syād anyathābhāvaḥ svabhāvo yaḍi vidyate ||
tasyaiva nānyathābhāvo nāpy anyasyaiva yuyate |
yuvā na jīryate yasmād yasmāj jīrṇo na jīryate ||

Op. cit., XIII. 4, 5.

In the next kārikā the author says that an advocate of the theory of jāti cannot account for his two propositions : first, saṃsāra 'continued existence'¹ is without a beginning,² but has an end ; and the second, liberation is with a beginning, but has no end. He says :

30

anāder antavattvaṃ ca saṃsārasya na setsyati |
anantatā cādimato mokṣasya na bhaviṣyati ||

'It would not be established that saṃsāra is without a beginning, but has an end ; nor would it be possible that liberation which has a beginning has no end.'

An advocate of the theory of origination has to admit that saṃsāra has its origination ; and if it is so, it must have a beginning. And that being so, the tenet that saṃsāra has no beginning cannot be maintained. Similarly according to him liberation also has its origination, and as such it must be with a beginning, and consequently must have an end, and in that case one cannot say that it has no end.

The point discussed in the next few kārikās is this that it is only when there is the existence of saṃsāra that there arises the question as to whether it has or has not a beginning or an end ; but in fact it has no existence at all. Says the Ācārya :

'That which is not at the beginning, nor at the end, is not also in the present, (i.e., in the middle²) ;³ being like the unreal things still appear as not unreal.'

Compare here what N ā g ā r j u n a says in his MK, XI. 2 :

That saṃsāra has neither a beginning nor an end is fully discussed in MK with MV, XI.

Now, there are two kinds of things, one kind experienced in dream (svapna), and the other in wakefulness (jāgrat); and it has been thoroughly established in Book II (Vaitathya Prakaraṇa) that there is no difference between the states of dream and wakefulness, and so the things experienced in the latter are as false as those in the former. The author here puts forth the same argument in the same language with a view to show that the thing which is as false as that in one's dream cannot come into being in reality, and so the jātivāda cannot stand. He says:

saprayojanatā teṣāṃ svapne'pi pratipadyate |
tasmād ādyantavattvena mithyaiva khalu te smṛtāḥ ||

'That the things have some purpose in dream also is known; hence owing to their beginning and end, indeed, they are regarded as false.'

One may object to the falsity of the phenomena of waking experience on the ground that they really serve some purpose; as for instance, water, when it is drunk, quenches one's thirst, while the phenomena in dream are not such. To this the author replies in the above kārikā. His point is this that the phenomena of dream are linked with one another by some purpose no less than those of waking experience. In dream also one drinks water to quench one's thirst. So the phenomena like those in dream having a beginning and an end have no reality at all; for that which has a beginning and an end cannot be real, as the mirage.

This kārīkā is identical with II. 7. See the note on it for a different reading.

It is said that the things seen in the waking state are false, because, as regards nature, they have no difference from those seen in dreams which are evidently false. But why the latter are so the author says in the next few kārīkās as in II. 1-10:

33

sarve dharmā mṛṣā svapne kāyasyāntar¹ nidarśanāt |
saṃvṛte² smin pradeśe vai bhūtānāṃ darśanaṃ kutaḥ ||

‘All things in dream are false as they are seen within the body; for how can objects be seen in this confined space (of the body)?’

² II. 1^d, 4^d

‘(In dream) the seeing (of a thing at a distance) having gone (up to it) is not reasonable; for there is no fixed rule of time for the act of going (there), and no persons being awake exist in the place (where they dream themselves to be).’

² Identical with II. 2^{c-d}.

35

‘When awake, he does not find his friends and others with whom he had deliberated, nor does he see all that which he had (then in dream) grasped.’

36

svapne cāvastukaḥ kāyaḥ pṛthag anyasya darśanāt |
yathā kāyas tathā sarvaṃ cittadṛśyam avastukam ||

‘In dream the (active) body is unreal, for (quite) a different body is seen (in the place where one dreams); and as the body so all the things which are cognizable by the mind are unreal.’

37

grahaṇāj jāgaritavat taddhetuḥ svapna iṣyate |
taddhetutvāc ca tasyaiva saj jāgaritam iṣyate ||

‘The experience (of dream) being like (that of) wakefulness, it (wakefulness) is considered to be the cause of dream; and that being so it is (also) considered that wakefulness is real only to him (i.e., the dreamer).’

It is a fact that cause and its effect must be of the same nature. Accordingly wakefulness and dream being the cause and the effect respectively must be of the same nature. So if a dream is false wakefulness is also false. And as a dream appears to be real only to the dreamer, so wakefulness, too, is real only to an ordinary unenlightened man.¹

¹ I think the logical order of the following four kārikās, viz., 38-41 should be as follows: 39, 41, 38 and 40. For the kārikās 39 and 41 with 32-37 form the same subject of discussion, i.e., the equality of the states of dream and wakefulness, while the kārikās 38 and 40 are meant for showing the impossibility of origination directly. The traditional order is shown in the present edition by the figures in parenthesis.

'In the waking state one sees an unreal thing and being absorbed in it sees it (also) in a dream. And in a dream, too, one sees an unreal thing, but does not see it when one awakes.'

To see the unreal is common to both the states, dream and wakefulness; the only difference between them is, however as stated in the kārikā itself.

'As in the waking state² through mistake one may see unthinkable things³ as real, so in dream it is owing to mistake that one sees things only in that (state).'

² The word jāgrad is taken here in the locative sense. See III. 29 together with Ś's commentary thereon and on IV. 40 (41): 'jāgraj jāgarite. Cf. IV. 65 and BU, IV. 3. 14 with the comm. jāgraj jāgaritadeśe. See also IV. 61, note 3.

³ Such as raju-sarpa 'string serpent,' etc.—Ś.

Having established above that a thing which are as false as that in a dream cannot come into being the author shows his conclusion of the ajātivāda by some other arguments:

40 (38)

utpādasyāprasiddhatvād ajam sarvam udāhṛtam |
na ca bhūtād abhūtasya saṃbhavo 'sti kathaṇcana ||

'As origination is not established all are said to be without origination. There is in no way origination of the non-existent from the existent.'

The origination of the non-existent, such as the horns of a hare, etc., is in no way seen.—Ś.

In the next kārikā the author says with regard to causation referred to just now that it itself is not reasonable:

41 (40)

nāsty asaddhetukam asat sad asaddhetukam tathā |
sac ca saddhetukam nāsti saddhetukam asat kutaḥ ||

'There is no non-existent arising from the non-existent, nor is there any existent arising from the non-existent; again there is no existent arising from the existent and where is the non-existent arising from the existent?'

Here are four points :

- (i) An unreal thing cannot have an unreal cause,
- (ii) nor can a real thing have an unreal cause; again,
- (iii) a real thing cannot have a real cause,
- (iv) nor can an unreal thing have a real cause.

Let us read here the following from MK, XXI. 12:

- (iii) na bhāvā jāyate bhāvo
- (ii) bhāvo 'bhāvān na jāyate ।
- (i) [nābhāvā jāyate 'bhāvo
- (iv) 'bhāvo bhāvān na jāyate ॥]¹

This is fully explained in MV. See the following from MK:

¹ These last two lines of the kārīkā missing in Sanskrit are rightly reconstructed by Poussin from the Tibetan which runs as follows:

dīos. med. dīos. med. mi. skye. ste ।
dīos. med. dīos. las. mi. skyeho ॥

This kārīkā is identical with CS, 364 (XV. 14) of Āryadeva.

Having thus refuted the jātivāda and established thereby the ajātivāda of the Buddhists the author goes on to reconcile some statements made by the Buddhas themselves, which appear to be irreconcilable with the ajātivāda doctrine.

These statements, some of which are quoted in the foot-note,¹ are in support of jāti. Besides, the Buddhas are found to have instructed their followers on causation, as their well-known pratītyasamutpāda 'dependent origination' itself shows very clearly.² It must, therefore, be admitted that the Buddhas have not denied jāti altogether. The Ācārya takes up the point and gives his reply in the following two kārīkās, the first of which runs thus :

upalambhāt samācārād astivastutvavādinām ।
jātis tu deśitā buddhair ajātes trasatām sadā ॥

'But jāti is taught by the Buddhas for those who from their perception and common practice hold that things exist (in reality) and are afraid of (the doctrine of) ajāti.'

These people who are intent upon the reality of things around them are of a lower order and are consequently frightened when they hear of the doctrine of ajāti and nairātmya (absence of ātman, i.e., svabhāva 'nature') as taught by the Buddhas.³ The Buddhas are, however, very kind-hearted and so in order to lead them easily and gradually to the truth (tattvāvatāra)⁴ followed the disposition of their minds and preached to them of jāti, though in fact there is nothing of the kind. The author himself says elsewhere (III. 15) that the creation described differently in the Upaniṣads with illustrations of earth, iron, sparks of fire and such other things is meant only as a means devised for making one 'descend to', i.e., realize, truth (upāyaḥ so'vatārāya). Now, when there is in fact no jāti it is certainly no good to teach it and consequently some evil would result from such teaching. The author, however, says that in reality there would arise no evil, or if it actually does, it would be very small which can easily be overcome (by following the path of the truth):

ajātes trasatām teṣām upalambhād viyanti ye |
jātidoṣa na setsyanti doṣo'py alpo bhaviṣyati ||

'Those who (being instructed of ajāti) go asunder owing to the perception (of things) and are afraid of (thinking) ajāti, are not affected with the evils resulting from (the perception of) jāti; (or if there be any evil) the evil will be a small one.'

The reality of a thing cannot be proved on the evidence of mere perception and common practice. For an elephant called up by illusion (māyāhastin) cannot exist in fact though we all may see it moving or carrying men. Thus the author says that it is only on account of perception and common practice that it is said of a thing that it exists, but in reality it does not :

upalambhāt samācārān māyāhastī yathocyate |
upalambhāt samācārād asti vastu tathocyate ||

'As an elephant called up by illusion is said to exist owing to perception and common practice, so on the same grounds it is said of a thing that it exists.'¹

svabhāvaḥ kalpito hastī paratantras tadākṛtiḥ |
yas.tatra hastyabhāvo 'sau pariniṣpanna iṣyate |

In the next kārikā the author says, as a Vijñānavādin can say, that there is only vijñāna (= citta) 'mind', and nothing else, yet it appears variously :

45

jātyābhāsaṃ calābhāsaṃ vastvābhāsaṃ tathaiva ca |
ajācalam avastutvaṃ vijñānaṃ śāntam advayam ||

'There is only vijñāna without the two (advaya),¹ which is quiescent (free from all sorts of disturbances), it has no origin (aja 'unborn'),² it does not move (acala), nor is it an object (avastutva),³ yet it appears to have an origin (jātyābhāsa), it appears to admit movements (calābhāsa), and it also appears to be an object.

It is to be noted here that vijñāna,⁴ citta and manas are synonyms. See LA. X. 459 :

cittaṃ vikalpo vijñaptir mano vijñānam eva ca |
ālayas tribhavaś ceṣṭā ete cittasya paryayāḥ ||

¹ The word dvaya refers to grāhya and grāhaka 'the percipient and the perceptible' respectively.

² But truly speaking according to the Buddhist theory it cannot be described even as aja. See IV. 74.

³ Literally, one that has no quality of an object.

⁴ Here in the kārikā under discussion the word vijñāna does not refer to Ātman or Brahman of the Vedāntist. The following kārikā (46) using citta which alludes to vijñāna in the present kārikā clearly bears it out. Ś takes here vijñāna as vijñapti, but in the next kārikā (IV. 46) he interprets it in the sense of ātman (: evam eva yathoktaṃ vijñānaṃ jātyādirahitam advayam ātmatattvaṃ vijñānantaḥ).

Ak. II. 34:

cittaṃ mano'tha vijñānam ekārtham.

Cf. SN, II. 94.

What follows from this discussion is shown in the next kārikā :

46

evam na jāyate cittaṃ¹ evaṃ dharmā ajāḥ smṛtāḥ |
evam eva vijñānto na patanti viparyaye ||²

' Thus the mind is not originated, and thus the objects³ are declared to be without origination. Those who know it in this way do not fall into error.'

¹ Cf. YV, III. 13-15: evaṃ na jāyate kiñcit.

³ Ś takes here the word to imply ātmans, but in IV. 54 to mean external things (bāhyadharmāḥ); and in IV. 58 he writes ātmāno 'nye ca dharmāḥ.

This truth is profusely illustrated in the next kārikās (47-52) by the simile of a fire-brand (alāta). The author says, that as the different appearances of a fire-brand in motion, such as a circle or a straight line, do not come into existence from a thing other than itself, nor do they go out to a place other than itself when it is at rest, and at the same time they do not enter into itself, even so when the mind vibrates its appearances in the form of different objects they do not come into being from any thing other than itself, and when it does not vibrate they do not go out anywhere, nor do they enter into it:

ṛjuvagrādikābhāsam alātaṃ spanditaṃ¹ yathā |
grahaṇagrāhakābhāsam vijñānaṃ spanditaṃ tathā² ||

' As a fire-brand being moved appears to be straight, or crooked, and so on, even so the mind when it moves appears as the perceiver (i.e., subject) and the perceptible (i.e., object).'

² Cf. cittaspaṇḍitaṃ (with the variant cittaṃ spandati vai sarvaṃ) in IV. 72, with vijñānaṃ spanditaṃ (or vijñānaspaṇḍitaṃ) in d of the present kārikā.

aspandamānaṃ alātaṃ anābhāsam ajaṃ yathā |
aspandamānaṃ vijñānaṃ anābhāsam ajaṃ tathā ||

' As a fire-brand when it does not move has no appearance (of its being straight, crooked, etc.), and is (thus) 'unborn', even so when the mind does not move it has no appearance (of any subject or object), and is (thus) 'unborn.'

For anābhāsa in the text cf. arūpaḥ, III. 36.

In the text alāta supported by many MSS, is, according to lexicons, another form of alāta.

49

'They (i.e., the appearances) do not go out from the fire-brand, for they have no qualities of a substance (dravya), and with reference to the mind, too, they must be the same, for there is no difference in appearances.'

It is a substance, dravya, that can move from one place to another, but appearances are not substances, and hence they cannot move. The second half of the kārikā says that as an appearance there is no difference whatsoever in the two cases, that is, the case of a fire-brand and that of the mind.

All this is Buddhistic, and so are also arguments and the words as the following quotations will show :

It is shown (IV. 14-18, 52) that there is no causation (hetu-phalābhāva or kāryakāraṇatābhāva). This is further explained in the following kārikā :

dravyaṃ dravyasya hetuḥ syād anyad anyasya caiva hi |
 dravyatvam anyabhāvo vā dharmāṇāṃ nopapadyate ||

'A substance can be a cause of another substance ; and a thing can be the cause of a different thing only ; but it is unreasonable to hold that things can have substantiality or mutual difference.'

A substance must have three qualities, (i) origination (utpāda), (ii) change (vyaya), and (iii) continuance (sthiti). But in fact there is no such thing called substance, as the Buddhists hold. See MK with MV, VII ; AN, I. 152. Again, it is well-known that from one thing a different thing is produced, and not the same thing from the same thing ; for instance, from a seed there is the sprout. Thus there is a difference between a cause and its effect. But in reality this difference, too, cannot be maintained. See MK, X.1 and 15 :

yad indhanaṃ sa ced agnir ekatvaṃ kartṛkarmaṇoḥ |
 anyaś ced indhanād agnir indhanād apy ṛte bhavet ||
 agnindhanābhyāṃ vyākhyāta ātmopādānayoḥ kramaḥ |

The author arrives at the conclusion :

54

evaṃ na cittajā dharmās cittaṃ vāpi na dharmajam |
 evaṃ hetuphalājātiṃ praviśanti manīṣiṇaḥ ||

'Thus the things are not produced from the mind (citta = viññāna), nor the mind from the things. And thus the wise enter into (the doctrine of) the non-origination of cause and effect.'

Cf. IV. 46.

'As long as there is a strong adherence to cause and effect there is the origination of cause and effect, but when the strong adherence to cause and effect is lost there is no existence of cause and effect.'

Here and in the next kārikā (56) the word āveśa in the text is the same as abhiniveśa (IV. 75, 79) 'strong adherence.' These are synonyms (to which graha and grāha, may be added). The latter is frequently used in Buddhist works in which it is clearly shown that not only cause and effect but everything round us owes its existence to one's strong adherence to it. The following may be cited here :

tad yathāpi nāma mahārāja puruṣaḥ suptaḥ svapnāntare

'As long as there is a strong adherence to cause and effect the world is extended, but when that strong adherence to cause and effect is lost the world is not possible.'

Thus having propounded to some extent the vijñānavāda our author proceeds incidentally to show also with the Buddhists that neither of the two theories, śāśvatavāda 'the theory that everything is eternal' and ucchedavāda 'the theory that every thing has annihilation'¹ can be maintained :

¹ These two views are specially with regard to soul and world. See, for instance, DN, I. 13, 39; MK XXVII.

57

saṃvṛtyā¹ jāyate sarvaṃ śāśvataṃ tena nāsti vai |
svabhāvena² hy ajaṃ sarvaṃ ucchedas tena nāsti vai ||

'In the practical truth (saṃvṛti) everything comes into being; hence there is nothing eternal. (On the other hand), everything is naturally without origination; hence there is no annihilation.'

It says that in the practical truth we say that a thing comes into being. In that case we cannot hold, so far as the practical truth is concerned, that there is any eternal thing. For that which has origination cannot be eternal, as an earthen jar. Again, as we have seen above, nothing has naturally any origination, and one that has no origination can have no annihilation also.

It is a fact that a sprout comes out only if there is a seed and not otherwise. Now the sprout is neither identical with, nor different from the seed. When there is a sprout the seed is not completely destroyed, nor is it absolutely in the same state as before. Hence it can be said that there is neither eternity nor annihilation.³

² All MSS. and editions examined by me read sadbhāvena for svabhāvena in c, yet I think the latter to be the actual reading. Everywhere in similar cases the author employs svabhāva (III. 22, IV. 8, 10, 23, 81) and not sadbhāva. In the same sense he uses also the word prakṛti (III. 21, IV. 9, 29, 91, 92, 93, 94). If one accepts the reading sadbhāvena the meaning will be, according to Ś, 'in transcendental truth' (paramārthasadbhāvena-pāramārthikasattayā). That the reading is svabhāvena is supported also by IV. 29 in which we read ajātiḥ prakṛtiḥ.

³ bijasya sato yathāṅkuro na ca yo bija sa caiva āṅkuro |
na ca anyu tato na caiva tad evam anuccheda-aśāśvatadharmatā ||
mudrāt pratimudra dṛśyate mudrasaṃkrānti na copalabhyate |
na ca tatra na caiva sānyato evaṃ saṃskāra 'nucchedaśāśvatāḥ ||

Some of the teachers hold either of these two theories, the śāsvatavāda 'the theory of eternality,' and ucchedavāda 'the theory of annihilation.' But in the teachings of the Buddhas who maintain the Middle Path (madhyamā pratipad), there is no room for any one of them. So his doctrine is said to be free from both the theories (anuccheda aśāsvata).⁴ This view of the Buddhists is too well-known to require here any particular treatment.

The Buddhists also proclaim that there are two truths (satya) which they call saṃvṛti satya 'practical or empirical truth' and paramārtha satya 'absolute or supreme or transcendental truth,' corresponding to vyavahāranaya and paramārthanaya of the Jains, and vyāvaharika satya and pāramārthika satya of Ś respectively.⁵

'The things which are said as generated are so in the empirical truth and not in fact. Their generation is like illusion, and that illusion, too, does not exist.'

The phrase 'generation is like illusion' may be explained saying that generation is like illusion, but itself is not illusion. The true sense is, however, not so. It says that generation is identical with illusion, there being no difference whatsoever between them (advayam advaidhikāram).²

As regards the non-existence of illusion see

According to this Mādhyamika theory even the Buddha and nirvāṇa, and, if there is anything higher than nirvāṇa, that, too, are illusion, i.e., those things and illusion are one and the same thing.

Now the Ācārya takes up again the vijñānavāda of the Buddhists showing that there is nothing but the citta which is the same as vijñāna or manas 'mind' that is transformed into the external world. And in doing so he shows that there is no difference whatsoever between the experiences in the waking state and those in dream, as has already been shown (II. 1-10) :

yathā svapne dvayābhāsaṃ cittaṃ calati māyayā |
tathā jāgrad dvayābhāsaṃ cittaṃ calati māyayā ||¹

'As owing to illusion the mind in dream moves with the appearance of the two (i.e., the subject and the object, or, in other words, the percipient and the perceived)², even so owing to illusion the mind in waking condition³ moves with the appearance of the two.'

¹ This as well as the next kārikā is the same as III. 29 and 30 respectively with a few variants.

³ The word jāgrad is to be taken here in the locative case. See IV. 39, note and 62.⁴

In these four kārīkās (IV. 63-66) it is said that whatever one sees in the waking state is nothing but one’s citta ‘mind’, just as the things in one’s dream. This view has repeatedly been expressed among others in LA, and specially in its Chapter X where the Buddha is reported to have said again and again that all the phenomena are citta (X. 483, 484, 692) : cittamātrā vadāmy aham ‘I say (all this is) only citta.’²

The word cittadṛśya here (IV. 64) and elsewhere (IV. 28, 36, 77) of which the equivalent is cittekṣaṇīya (IV. 66) is found in frequent use in LA, pp. 56 (four times), 79, 8 (twice), 93, 94, 186 (twice), 338 (twice), etc.

‘You say that the cognition of both of them is dependent on each other, but you do not say what remains then. Both of them have no characteristics, yet they are cognized owing to their (previous) thought.’

In the text ubha and ubhaya refer to ‘mind’ (citta) and jīvas or objects in general referred to in the preceding kārikās. Their cognition depends on each other; for no object is perceived without the thought of the object, nor is the thought of an object possible without the existence of the object.¹ So they are interdependent in this respect. Owing to this interdependence neither of them is established as a real thing, and as such they have no characteristics and yet they are cognized owing to our previously existing thoughts of them.

The use of such words as nirmāṇa, nirmāṇakāya, and nirmāṇacitta occurs also in the Yoga system (YS, IV. 4, 5 with scholiasts).

The use of the word nirmāṇa in almost the same sense can, however, be traced back to Upaniṣadic texts :

sa yatra prasvapity asya lokasya sarvāvato mātṛam upādāya svayaṃ vihatya svayaṃ nirmāya° prasvapiti. BU, IV. 3, 9.

ya eṣa supteṣu jāgarti kāmam kāmam puruṣo nirmimāṇaḥ |
KU, V. 8.

It appears, however, that it is the Buddhists who first used the word in that definite sense.

Now having thus established his thesis the author asserts his conclusion in the following kārikā, which is already found once more (III. 48) :

71

na kaścij jāyate jīvaḥ¹ sambhavo 'sya na vidyate |
etat tad uttamaṃ satyaṃ² yatra kiñcin na jāyate ||

² For the wording cf. etat tu paramam satyam, MV, p. 120.

'No Jīva of any kind takes birth, nor is there any possibility of it. It is that highest truth in which nothing originates.'

See III. 48.

Now it is affirmed in the next kārīkā that the world consisting of the subject and the object has no reality at all, it being the creation of the movement of mind which in fact has no object at all, and as such it is held to be always free from any sort of attachment or relationship to an object (asaṅga) :

72

cittaspaṇḍitam evedaṃ grāhyagrāhakavad dvayam |
cittaṃ nirviṣayaṃ nityam asaṅgaṃ tena kīrtitam ||

'This duality which consists of the subject and the object (lit. the perceiver and the perceptible) is only the vibration of the citta 'mind'. citta has no object, therefore it is said to be always asaṅga 'having no attachment (or relation to an object).'

See IV. 79 (niḥsaṅga). Cf. anābhāsa (= nirābhāsa), III. 46; IV. 48.

As regards asaṅga see LA, p. 157 : asaṅgalakṣaṇaṃ jñānaṃ viṣayavaicitryasaṅgalakṣaṇaṃ vijñānaṃ°, asaṅgasvabhāvalakṣaṇaṃ jñānaṃ°, aprāptilakṣaṇaṃ jñānaṃ.

Op. cit., III. 66. 16.

Having shown that the duality consisting of the subject and the object is the creation of mind the author says in the next kārīkā that its existence is only in empirical (saṃvṛti) and not in absolute (paramārtha) truth. For a thing which is dependent (paratantra) for its existence may exist in empirical and not in absolute truth:

73

yo 'sti kalpitasaṃvṛtyā paramārthena nāsty asau |
paratantro¹ 'bhisamvṛtyā syān nāsti paramārthataḥ ||

'Whatever exists in empirical truth (saṃvṛti) which is imagined (kālpita) does not exist in absolute truth (paramārtha), for one that is dependent (paratantra, for its existence or origination) may exist (only) in empirical truth which is the cause (of existence or origination), and not in absolute truth.'

For the first half of the kārikā see IV. 57a and 58a-b.

¹ Here the actual reading in all the editions and MSS. examined is paratantrābhi° and not paratantro'bhi° as given above. The reading in c of the next kārikā (74), too, is paratantrābhi° in all of them excepting the MS. k of the Anandashram edition and the edition of Maheśacandra Pāla, both of which read here paratantro'bhi°. As the sense requires and is supported by Buddhist works, as we shall presently see, the genuine reading here in the kārikā (73) must be paratantro'bhi° (See the discussion in the body). Here abhisamvṛti in this kārikā (73) in meaning is, as appears to me, nothing but abhiniṣpatti saṃvṛti in kārikā 74. Now abhiniṣpatti saṃvṛti means saṃvṛti which is the cause of existence, or appearance of things (abhiniṣpadyate 'nayā). One should therefore read paratantro'bhi° in 73 in accordance with the reading in 74. Otherwise the kārikās cannot properly be explained. One can hardly follow Ś who explains paratantrābhisamvṛtyā as paraśāstravyavahāreṇa and paratantrābhinisṣpattyā as paraśāstrasiddhim apekṣya in 73 and 74 respectively. Whether one can read hi for 'bhi in c of the present kārikā may also be considered.

It follows from what is said above that a thing is to be regarded as having no origination (aja). Our author, however, says that this assertion can be made only so far as the empirical truth is concerned, but in absolute truth even this is not possible, for a dependent thing comes into being only in empirical truth :

74

ajāḥ kalpitasaṃvṛtyā paramārthena nāpyajāḥ |
paratantro'bhinisṣpattyā saṃvṛtyā jāyate tu saḥ ||

'One (held) to be unborn (aja) is so in empirical truth which is imagined, but in absolute truth it is even not unborn; for that which is dependent comes into being in empirical truth, the cause of appearance.'

The words saṃvṛti and paratantra in kārikās 73 and 74 are very important and require some explanation. The first of them has, however, already been discussed above (IV. 56, 57) to some extent and the following may be added thereto. In the Mādhyamika system as in the school of Vedānta saṃvṛti satya is called also vyavahāra or vyāvahārika ('practical') satya. The two kinds of truth, saṃvṛti, or vyavahāra or vyāvahārika and paramārtha are regarded in Buddhism as the means (upāya) and the end (upeya) respectively.¹

See also MK, XXIV. 20 :

vyavahāram anāśritya paramārtho na deśyate |
paramārtham anāgamyā nirvāṇaṃ nādhigamyate ||

In Pali Buddhism saṃvṛti satya is sammuti sacca (Skt. sammati satya) 'truth by general consent'. Poussin writes (JA, 1903, Tome II, p. 302) : "vèrite conforme à l'assentiment universel mais erroné" ('truth conformed to universal assent but erroneous'). The literal meaning of the word saṃvṛti is that by which (the true nature of a thing) is 'covered' (svabhāva- varaṇāt) and it is regarded as truth because it brings to light what is covered (āṇṭapraṇāṇāt). See IV. 57, and BAP on IX. 2 (p. 352). The following may be quoted here from MA, VI. 23 as cited in BAP, p. 361 :

samyagmṛṣādarśanalabdhabhāvaṃ
rūpadvayaṃ bibhrati sarvabhāvāḥ | samyagdṛśāṃ yo viśayaḥ sa tattvaṃ
mṛṣādṛśāṃ samvṛtisatyam uktaṃ ||

Now as regards paratantra 'dependent' it has a special significance as evident from Buddhist sources. In Buddhism there are three characteristics (lakṣaṇa) or natures (svabhāva) of a thing, viz., (i) parikalpita 'imagined', (ii) paratantra 'dependent', and (iii) pariniṣpanna 'perfect'.¹ Sometimes they are briefly called (i) kalpita, (ii) tantra, and (iii) niṣpanna respectively.² Any object, for instance, an elephant, according to Mādhyamikas or Yogācāras is śūnya or merely a creation of mind, yet we know it as a particular object. This characteristic of it is an imagined one (parikalpita). Now the notion or imagination of the object depends for its being on its cause (or cause and conditions, hetu-pratyaya), and so the characteristic is called paratantra (= pratītyasamutpanna). That the object is in fact always devoid of the imagined characteristics referred to above is pariniṣpanna. It is so also because there is perfect invariance or because it is free from any change.³ They are called 'nature' (svabhāva) owing to such practice of the people though in fact they do not exist.⁴ Vasubandhu gives here an example in his TSN, 27, 28: Suppose one creates an elephant by dint of one's spell. There the elephant appears, but there is only the form of the elephant, and in no way the elephant itself. Here the elephant is parikalpita; the form of the elephant is paratantra, and the absence of the elephant is pariniṣpanna.⁵

Of these three lakṣaṇas or *svabhāvas*⁶ the first, parikalpita, may roughly be compared in the system of the Advaita Vedānta of Ś

According to Buddhists nīrodha, nirvāṇa, and ākāśa are the examples of pariniṣpanna.

⁷ For a detailed discussion and bibliography and sources, ancient and modern, see ViS, pp. 514-561; TSN; LA, pp. 126, 127, 169, 170, 176, etc.; MSA, VI. 1, XI. 13, 38.41, XIX. 51, 78, 79; SNS, VI.

It is to be noted that saṃvṛti consists in parikalpita and paratantra svabhāvas and paramārtha in pariniṣpanna. Thus it is rightly said in the kārikā 73 that paratantra can exist only in practical truth (saṃvṛti) and not in any way in absolute truth. This is fully explained by Prājñākaramati (in his BAP, pp. 354-355) saying that whatever comes into existence (jāyate) does so being dependent on the entirety of the cause and conditions (hetupratyayasāmagrī), and that which is thus dependent for its existence has no existence in reality, like a shadow on a looking glass. Let the following be quoted here :

api tu hetupratyayasāmagrīm pratitya māyāvad utpadyate. tadvaikalyato nirudhyate ca. hetupratyayasāmagrīm pratitya jātasya parāyattātmalābhasya pratibimbasyeva kutaḥ satsvabhāvatā. na ca kasyacid padārthasya paramārthato hetupratyayasāmagritāḥ samutpattiḥ sambhavati.

The subject under discussion is that nothing originates (etat tad uttamaṃ satyaṃ yatra kiñcin na jāyate, III. 48, IV. 71). It has been shown in establishing it that the notion of origination is only in empirical reality and not in absolute reality in which we cannot assert the existence of even a thing that is without origination. The author now says in the next kārikā that the notion of origination is due to a strong adherence (abhiniveśa) to the unreal (abhūta) referring hereby to the two (dvaya), i.e., the percipient and the perceptible (grāhya and (grāhaka):

abhūtābhiniveśo 'sti dvayaṃ tatra na vidyate |
dvayābhāvaṃ sa buddhvaiva nirnimitto na jāyate ||

'There is a strong adherence to what has not been (*abhūta*¹), for the two² are not there. Just when he understands the non-existence of the two it goes beyond the range of its cause and does not come into being.'³

The cause of origination is abhūtābhiniveśa. When one clearly understands the true nature of the two which have no existence at all that abhiniveśa goes away and consequently the notion of origination does not arise.

Ś explains the word he (saḥ) in the original (c) in the following way : dvayābhāvaṃ buddhvā nirnimitto nivṛttamithyādvayābhiniveśo yaḥ sa na jāyate—'He who having understood the absence of the two is beyond the cause and (thus) whose strong adherence to the two which are false has turned back, is not born.'

This explanation does not appear to be proper when one reads the karikā under discussion with the kārikā IV. 79, where the same phrase (dvayābhāvaṃ sa buddhvaiva, 75) occurs once more with a slight variation (vastvabhāvaṃ for dvayābhāvaṃ), there being no difference of meaning (vastvabhāva = dvayābhāva—Ś). Let the kārikā be quoted here :

abhūtābhiniveśād dhi sadṛśe tat pravartate |
vastvabhāvaṃ sa buddhvaiva niḥsaṅgaṃ vinivartate ||

¹ That is, 'unreal,' referring to the two (dvaya) that follows.

² The percipient and the perceptible (grāhya-grāhaka), see IV. 72.

³ See IV. 79.

How is it to be explained? The meaning is simple and clear. It says that it is only owing to one's persistent belief in unreality that it (citta 'mind') goes onward to a similar object (i.e., the mind relates itself to an unreal object), but as soon as one understands the absence of a thing it becomes free from contact and turns back.

But here is a difficulty regarding grammar. In accordance with Pāṇini, III. 4. 21, the agent (kartṛ) of both the verbs buddhvā and vinivartate in the second half of the kārikā must be the same; but the fact is not so, for the agent of the former is saḥ, while that of the latter is tat in the first half.

This anomaly is however found in writings even of such great poets as Kālidāsa. He writes in his Raghuvamśa, I. 77 :

matprasūtim anārādhya prajeti tvāṃ śaśāpa sā |⁴

In defence of Pāṇini, or in other words, to meet the difficulty arising from his rule later grammarians say that such words as sthita and the like are to be understood in such cases, so that there may be the same agent of the verbs used.⁵

The use of the gerund in the Vedic language in this respect is not so strict as in the classical Sanskrit that follows Pāṇini. See the following sentences in which the verbs have different agents : striyaṃ dṛṣṭvā kitavaṃ tatāpa 'having seen

⁴ Mallinātha attempts to explain it away taking anārādhya in the causative sense (asevayitvā). Similar instances are many :

(i) yaj jñātvā neha bhūyo 'nyaj jñātavyam avaśīsyate || BG, VII. 2.

(ii) tac ca saṃsmṛtya saṃsmṛtya rūpam atyadbhutam hareḥ |
vismayo me mahān rājan hṛṣyāmi ca muhumuhūḥ || BG, XVIII 77.

(iii) mṛtaṃ dṛṣṭvā duḥkham bhavati, (iv) priyaṃ dṛṣṭvā sukham syāt, sukham utpadyate, etc.

⁵ See Samkṣiptasāra with Vṛtti and Tīkā ed., Śyāmācarāṇa Kaviratna, Calcutta, 1318, B.S., Kṛdantapāda, 407; Mugdhabodha, ed., Subalacandra Mitra, Calcutta, 1316, B.S., Sūtra, 1116; Kalāpavyākaraṇa with commentaries ed. Gurunātha Vidyānidhi Bhaṭṭācāryya, Calcutta, 1835 Śaka, Kṛdvṛtti, Sūtra 433.

a woman (it) pains a gambler' (RV, X. 34. 11). Similar uses are found also in the Brāhmaṇas. The following is from the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa : te paśava oṣadhī jagdhvā apah pītva tata eṣa rasaḥ saṃ bhavati 'the beasts having eaten the plants and drunk water—then the vital sap arises.'

Following this the line under discussion (IV. 79) would be explained by a grammarian thus : sa (yadā) vastvabhāvaṃ buddhvaiva (bhavati tadā) taṃ niḥsaṅgaṃ vmiyartate,—'just when he understands the absence of things it (mind) turns back being free from relation'. Now in the kārikā (79) the word sa(h) must refer to one (understood) whose abhūtābhiniveśa is stated.

In the same way, I think, the kārikā 75, too, should be explained : It is the abhūtābhiniveśa itself and not the person whose abhūtābhiniveśa is alluded to, that does not arise (jāyate).⁶

Naturally one has a persistent belief in the abhūta or unreal things, i.e., the percipient and the perceptible which have, in fact, no existence at all. So when one clearly understands their non-existence there is no room for that persistent belief to come into being.

Now, as regards abhūtābhiniveśa compare abhūtaparikalpa of the Buddhists. We read the following in the LA, pp. 149-150 :

abhūtaparikalpa 'bhūtaparikalpa iti bhagavann ucyate. katamasyaitad bhagavan dharmasyādhivacanaṃ yad utābhūta-parikalpa iti kiṃ vā pravikaipayann abhūtaparikalpo bhavati. bhagavān āha sādhu sādhu mahāmate⁷ nṛṇāṃ grāhyagrāhakābhiniveśābhiniṣṭhānāṃ ca⁸ bāhyavicitrārthopalambhābhiniveśāc cittacaittakalāpo vikalpasamśabditaḥ pravartamānaḥ pravartata ātmātmīyābhiniveśāt.

⁶ Or one may take here nirnimitto na jāyate with reference to *yo 'sti kalpita*⁹ (IV. 73) and it may be explained saying that which is or originates in the empirical truth does not do so when one has no notion of the two (grāhya and grāhaka), there being no cause (nirnimitta) for origination.

The abhūtābhiniveśa in our work (IV. 75, 79) is, in fact, abhūta-parikalpa of the Yogācāras. See the following line in the Madhyāntavibhaṅga (I. 2^{a-b}) of Maitreya nātha :

abhūtaparikalpo 'sti dvayaṃ tatra na vidyate |⁷

From this it is perfectly clear that the first half of our kārikā under discussion is in reality taken from Maitreya nātha.

The word nimitta in nirnimitta 'devoid of nimitta' has a special sense in Buddhist literature. There is a very common phrase : na nimittagrāhī bhavati, Pali °ggāhī hoti, DSṇ, §§ 1345-6. It means that when a nimitta 'specific appearance'⁸ of a thing is grasped in the way such as a male, a female, pleasant, etc., a man is entangled in various worldly troubles, and so it is advised that he should not be a nimittagrāhin 'grasper of nimittas.' As the specific appearances are the causes of attachment, aversion, and delusion (rāga, dveṣa, and moha) they are called nimittas.⁹ See AS, p. 400.

This special meaning seems not to have been intended in the present case. We may take the word here as well as in IV. 77 and 78 in the sense of 'objective cause' which is expressed by the word artha in IV. 24.

Having said as to how that persistent belief disappears, the author proceeds to discuss in the following kārikās how the non-origination (anutpatti) of mind is effected which is to be realized :

⁷ MVBT, pp. 9 ff. On b of the kārikā Sthira nāti writes : svāmany avidyamānena grāhyagrāhakākāreṇa prakhyāte [na vyaktaṃ bhrāntirūpatvaṃ].

'When the mind does not have any cause, superior, inferior, or middle, it does not originate; for how is there the effect in the absence of the cause?'

Here hetu is nothing but nimitta in the preceding kārikā. See IV. 77-78.

animittasya cittasya yānutpattiḥ samādvayā |
ajātasyaiva sarvasya cittadṛśyaṃ hi tad yataḥ ||

This kārikā seems to have been handed down defectively. For, evidently in the first half the sentence is not complete, as the conjunctive pronoun yad (in feminine yā) requires the pronoun tad in feminine (in any case-ending), but it is not to be found in either of the two halves. Nor is there the antecedent of tad in the second half which clearly shows to have supported something stated before. But what is it? The explanation of Ś appears to be far-fetched and far from satisfactory, nor has he explained the word tad which has altogether been overlooked. It seems to me, therefore, that the above two lines are taken by mistake from two different kārikās of which the other two lines are lost. I leave the present kārikā, as it is before us, untranslated, as it does not give any complete sense, so far as I can understand. The first half may, however, be explained thus:

The non-origination (anutpatti) of the causeless (animitta)¹ mind (citta) is the same (samā, i.e., unconditioned—always in the same condition) and free from the two (advaya, i.e., free from the notion of the grāhya 'receptible', and the grāhaka 'recipient').

See IV. 75.

See kārikā IV. 80. For the word sama or sāmya see III. 2, 38 IV. 80, 93, 95, 100 with the author's explanation; and MuU, II. 1. 3. cf. BG, V. 19: nir-doṣaṃ hi samaṃ brahma. See MV, pp. 374-75: mañjuśrīr āha. paramārthataḥ sarvadharmānutpāda samatayā paramārthataḥ sarvadharmātyantājātisamatayā paramārthataḥ samāḥ sarvadharmāḥ.

For cittadṛśya in the second half see III. 31, IV. 28, 36.

buddhvā 'nimittatam satyam hetum prthag anāpnuvat'¹
vitaśokam tadā 'kāmaṃ abhayaṃ padam aśnute ||

'When one understands its² true state of causelessness (it (citta) does not have any other cause,⁴ and as such reaches then a position⁵ which is free from sorrow, desire, and fear.'

I read with MS. D² anāpnuvat for anāpnuvan in edition and other MSS., construing it with citta referred to in the preceding kārikā (77). It is to be noted that it is citta that is referred to in kārikās IV. 76-80. In kārikā 79 the pronoun ta refers to citta, as says Ś, too, expressly. One may naturally expect to have its mention or reference also in the present kārikā. To introduce a person who reaches the position is rather abrupt. It is also to be considered that it is citta and not the person that is concerned with the cause or causes (IV. 76).

In this case the grammatical difficulty is to be removed as in IV. 75.

² That is, of the citta 'mind.' See IV. 25, 26, 27, 75, 77.

³ That is, the state of being without the objective cause.

⁴ See IV. 76.

⁵ pada=sthiti, IV. 80.

Accepting the reading anāpnuvan the kārikā may be translated thus :

'Having understood the true state of the causelessness and having no other cause one reaches then a position free from sorrow, desire and fear.'

79

abhūtābhiniveśād dhi sadṛśe tat pravartate |
vastvabhāvaṃ sa buddhvaiva niḥsaṅgaṃ vinivartate ||

'Owing to a persistent belief in what is non-existent it goes onwards to a similar object, but as soon as one understands the absence of a thing it turns back being free from relativity.'

The word sadṛśa means what is thought to be similar to one in which one has strong or persistent belief. niḥsaṅga means one beyond the reach of any connection with the object.

For c one is referred to IV. 75. See III. 45; IV. 72, 75, 96, 99.

'At that time when (the citta) has turned back from and does not go (again) onwards to (its object), its position is firm (i.e., unwavering in the least). That is the field of activity of the Buddhas,¹ and that is the same,² unborn, and free from the two.'³

³ The perceptible and the percipient (grāhya and grāhaka).

In c viśaya may be taken in the sense of the object of knowledge.

See III. 46 and IV. 77 from which it will be evident that this state is the summum bonum of both the Buddhists and the Vedāntists, which they call nirodha or nirvāṇa and brahma respectively. The Vedāntist commentator, Ś, writes here very clearly that this state of mind is brahma :

cittasya niścalā calanavarjitā brahmasvarūpaiva tadā sthitiḥ yaiṣā brahmasvarūpā sthitiḥ cittasyādvayavijñānaikarasaghana lakṣaṇā.

And again on IV. 77 he says :

animittasya cittasyeti yā mokṣākhyanutpattiḥ.⁴

That this state of citta is the field of activity of the Buddha is clearly said in Buddhist works :

cittamātraṃ nirābhāsaṃ vihāro buddhabhūmi ca |
etad dhi bhāṣitaṃ buddhair bhāṣante bhāṣayanti ca ||

LA, X. 105.

arthābhāse ca vijñāne jñānaṃ tathatāgocaram |
parāvṛttaṃ nirābhāsaṃ āryāṇāṃ gocaro hy asau ||

Op. Cit., X. 148.

This state is the same as what we know from such lines as the following from Buddhist works : vijñaptimātratāyāṃ cittā avasthitam bhavati. Tk., p. 43.

For the wording of c (viśayaḥ sa hi buddhānāṃ) see C p. 497 : viśayaḥ sa hi buddhānāṃ ; Vk, p. 6 : yo buddhānāṃ viśayaḥ ; p. 11 : buddhagocaraḥ ; SŚP, p. 120, *5a : yatpramāṇaṃ buddhaviśayaḥ ; MSA, XX-XXI. 26 : buddhānāṃ viśayaḥ ; api ; LA, III. 80 : āryāṇāṃ gocaro yathā.

⁴ See cittam pravartate citram cittam eva vimucyate | cittam hi jāyate nānyac cittam eva nirudhyate || Op. Cit., X. 14.

This state of mind to which the Buddhas aspire is further described in the following kārīkā :

81

ajam anidram asvapnaṃ prabhātaṃ bhavati svayam |
sakṛd vibhāti hy evaiṣa dharmo dhātuḥ svabhāvataḥ ||

See III. 36.

'It shines forth itself having no origination, nor sleep, nor dream. Indeed, this object (dharmā), the fundamental element (dhātu), is naturally illumined once for all.'

The word dharmā in the second half of the kārīkā may be taken in its general sense, an element of existence, an object, thing. But considering the views of the Yōgācāras, and specially what V a s u b a n d h u and his commentator S t h i r a m a t i have said in describing this state of mind¹ it is to be taken in the sense of a special kind of dharmā, i.e., āśrayaparāvṛtti 'revolution or change of the recipient (i.e., ālayavijñāna which is the seed of all, sarvabijaka).'²

A few words are here required with regard to the reading dharmo dhātuḥ svabhāvataḥ. This reading is found in some of the MSS. of the Anandashram edition and in some others too, examined by me, while others read dharmo dhātusva°. Ś accepts the latter and Ā n a n d a g i r i supports it saying dhātusvabhāvata ity ekam padaṃ gṛhitvā vyācaṣṭe. This implies that the reading dhātuḥ sva° was also known to him. But neither of them seems to be very satisfactory and this leads the present writer to amend the reading as dharmadhātuḥ svabhāvataḥ. The reading dharmo dhātuḥ appears to be due to the unfamiliarity of the commentators with the significance of the word dharmadhātu which is quite appropriate here. Let us therefore explain the kārīkā in this light.

In accordance with this reading the second half may be translated thus :

'Indeed the essence of reality (dharmadhātu)³ is naturally illumined once for all.'

See I. 14, 16; III. 36, 37. For c see ChU, VIII. 4. 1-2 which is the same. See also NUU, 9; MkU, 2-23.

We take the next three kārīkās together. The kārīkā 82 is incomplete and as such should be construed with 83.

³ The word dharmadhātu may be translated by 'the essence of reality. It is devoid of the characteristics of subject and object (viyukto grāhyagrāhaka lakṣaṇena) or undifferentiated into subject and object (grāhyagrāhakarāhita). It is a synonym for paramārtha or paramārthatattva, MVt, § XCIX. 8; Tk p. 41, I. 26; BAP, p. 354: parama uttamo 'rthaḥ. akṛtrimam vasturūpaṃ yadadhiḡamāt sarvāvṛttivāsānānusandhikleśaprahāṇam bhavati. sarvadharmāṇāṃ niḥsvabhāvāt sūnyatā tathatā bhūtakoṭiḥ dharmadhātūr ityādi paryāyāḥ. Again, p. 421: bodhir buddhatvam ekānekasvabhāvaviviktaṃ anutpanni- niruddham anucchedam aśāśvataṃ sarvaprapañcavinirmuktaṃ akāśapratīsamā dharmakāyākhyam paramārthatattvam ucyate. etad eva ca prajñāpāramitā sūnyatā-tathatā-bhūtakoṭi-dharmadhātvādisābdhena samvṛtim upādāyābhidhiyate

Writes M a i t r e y a n ā t h a (MVBT, I p. 41):

tathatā bhūtakoṭiś cānimittāḥ pa[ramārthakāḥ] |

ananyathāviparyāsatannirodhāryagocaraiḥ |
hetutvāc cāryadharmāṇāṃ paryāyārtho yathākramam || I. 15-16.

As regards dharmadhātu V a s u b a n d h u says here (pp. 41-42) āryadharmahetutvād dharmadhātuḥ. āryadharmāṇāṃ tadāmbanaprabhāvātva- hetvartho hy atra dhātvarthaḥ (see Tk, p. 44, II. 20, 21). On the last word

'It is the adherence to (an idea of) a thing—whatsoever it may be,¹ by which bliss is constantly covered and misery is unfolded. The glorious one (dharmadhātu)—

(i) is, (ii) is not, (iii) is and is not (i.e., both), or (iv) neither is nor is not (i.e., not both)—with these (notions) the childish obscure it (respectively² in accordance with their own ideas of its being) (i) steady,³ (ii) unsteady, (iii) both,⁴ and (iv) the absence (of both).⁵

Sthiramati comments: svalakṣaṇopādāyarūpadhāraṇo 'py ayaṃ dhātuśabdo vartata ity āha hetvartho°. The word dhātu also means one that supports its own particularity (svalakṣaṇa) and the secondary qualities of matter (upādāya or bhautika rūpa), including evidently, as observes Stcherbatsky (MVD, p. 050) also the primary qualities of matter (mahābhūta). Dharmadhātu also means the mental state considered as element (dhātu) owing to its ultimate reality. See Pali Text Society's Dictionary, s.v. dhama; Compendium of Philosophy, pp. 254-255.

² In explaining calasthira° in c of 83 sthira is to be taken first as required by the sense (arthakrama) even discarding the order of reading (pāṭhakrama).

³ That is, permanent.

⁵ That is, neither steady nor unsteady.

These are the four points by the adherence to which the glorious one is always covered, but (in fact) it is not touched by them. One who realizes it is omniscient.'

In nāsti nāstīti vā in c of kārikā 83 take the first na with asti and nāsti, as na, asti and na nāsti.

These four points are maintained by four classes of disputants according to their ideas of the Absolute, as it is permanent, not permanent, both, or not both. But some of the Buddhists (Vijñānavādins and Mādhyamikas) do not subscribe to any one of these views, their point is quite free from all of them. While in the Vedānta the first point is avowedly held; e.g., VI. 12 and 13:

astīti bruvato 'nyatra kathaṃ tad upalabhyate । astīty evopalabdavyaḥ ।

TU, II. 6. 1:

asti brahmeti ced veda santam enaṃ tato viduḥ ।

MU, IV. 4:

As regards the position of the Buddhists it is also clear:

It is to be noted here that according to Ś the word bhagavat 'the glorious one' in 82d and 84c refers to ātman. On the following grounds, however, I think, it is the dharmadhātu in 81c, which is alluded to.

The subject matter here in kārikās 80-84 is the unwavering or the firm state of the mind which has turned back from and does not go onwards again to its object—the state which is dharmadhātu and to which aspire the Buddhas. This is further dealt with in the following two kārikās (85-86). There is, therefore, no room for ātman to which the word bhagavat may refer.

An objection may be raised here that the word bhagavat is used with reference to a conscious or sentient being, and as such it cannot refer to dharmadhātu which is nothing but the nīscalā sthiti of the mind. One can, however, meet it in the following way. Such common phrases as bhagavati śrutiḥ, bhagavān vedaḥ, bhagavati bhavitavyatā, etc., will show that the word under discussion is employed also to non-sentient beings. It is found that anything, irrespective of its being sentient or otherwise, that is powerful or commands respect, regard, faith, confidence, or reverence may be referred to by bhagavat.

It is also to be taken into consideration that this dharmadhātu is in fact Brahman of the Vedāntists as shown in the clearest possible words by the author himself in III. 46 which we have already discussed. Again, the dharmadhātu is the same as what we understand by the word prajñāpāramitā.⁷ And it is very well-known that prajñāpāramitā is reverently mentioned with the epithet bhagavati. Besides, this dharmadhātu which is the same as prajñāpāramitā is nothing but advaya jñāna, i.e., the jñāna which is free from the subject and the object, and this is identified with Tathāgata as is evident from the following couplet from the PAS of Dīnāga as quoted by Haribhadra in his AAA, p. 28.⁸

prajñāpāramitā jñānam advayaṃ sa tathāgataḥ |
sādhyā tādarthayogena tēcchabdyam granthamārgayoḥ ||

The first half of this kārikā is based on such old texts as the following :

cittamātrāvatāreṇa prajñā tathāgatī matā | LA, III. 43.

See Ibid., pp. 187-190 ending with yat sarvaprapaṇcātitaṃ sa tathāgataḥ. See also pp. 191 ff.⁹

⁸ See E. OBERMILLER: DPP, pp. 7, 45; SS, p. 14.

⁹ Let us quote here another passage which is very significant, though a little lengthy, from the same work, i.e., LA, pp. 191-193 :

na hi mahāmate abhāvas tathāgatagato° kintu mahāmate manomayadharmakāyasya tathāgatasyaitad adhivacanam yatra (yat?) sarvatīrthakaraśrāvaka-pratyekabuddhasaptabhūmipratīṣṭhītānām aviśayaḥ. so'yo? : 'nutpādas tathāgatasya itan mahāmate paryāyavacanam. tad yathā mahāmate indraḥ śakraḥ purandaraḥ hastaḥ karaḥ pāṇis tanur dehaṃ śarīraṃ pṛthivī bhūmir vasundharā kham ākāśam gaganam ity evamādyānām bhāvānām ekaikasya bhāvasya bahavaḥ

For Tathāgata see also MK, XXII.

No objection can therefore be raised here with regard to the use of the word bhagavat.

It is said in the preceding kārīkā that one, who realizes that truth, becomes omniscient. The present kārīkā tells us that omniscience being realized, there is nothing that can be desired, for every desire is fulfilled thereby :

85

prāpya sarvajñatām kṛtsnām brāhmaṇyam padam advayam |
anāpannādimaḍhyāntam kim ataḥ param ihate ||

'Having realized the full omniscience and (thereby) that state which is befitting a Brāhmaṇa,¹ and free from the two,² and has no beginning, middle and end, what may desire beyond it?'

¹ In Buddhist literature a Brāhmaṇa is held in as much respect as a Śramaṇa, and this is evident from the well-known phrase śramaṇa-brāhmaṇa which is so frequently used. See DP, XXVI. Sometimes a true Brāhmaṇa is regarded as, or identified with a Buddha :

It is to be noted that the final aim is described here to be the realization of omniscience (sarvajñatā, cf. sarvākārajñā bodhi) which can be asserted more preferably from the Buddhist point of view than from the Vedāntist.

usabham pavaram viraṁ mahesiṁ vijitāvinam |
anejam nahatakam buddham tam aham brūmi brāhmaṇam ||
Op. cit., XXV

It may be noted that according to Buddhists a Brāhmaṇa is so called because he is vāhitapāpa 'one whose sin is removed' (Op. cit., XXV). This is, however, far-fetched. The following may be quoted here :

ye ca vāhitapāpatvād brāhmaṇaḥ pāramārthikāḥ |
abhyastāmalanairātmyās te muner eva śāsane ||
ihaiva śramaṇas tena caturdhā parikirttyate |
śūnyāḥ parapravādā hi śramaṇair brāhmaṇais tathā || TS, 3589,

K a m a l a ś i l a writes on it in his Pañjikā: ata eva bhagavatoktam iha śramaṇaḥ ihaiva brāhmaṇaḥ śūnyāḥ parapravādāḥ śramaṇair brāhmaṇair iti.

² The subject and the object.

The following kārīkā says that this realization of omniscience is the object of vinaya 'discipline' and real śama 'quiescence' and dama 'introversion' of the senses.

86

viprāṇām vinayo hy eṣa śamaḥ prākṛta ucyate |
damaḥ prakṛtidāntatvād evam vidvāḥ śamaṁ vrajeyuḥ ||

'This is, indeed, the discipline of the wise, and is said to be the natural quiescence, and the introversion (of the senses) owing to (their) being naturally introverted. Knowing this, one should become quiescent.'

The reality set forth in the preceding kārīkā (IV. 80-) is further described in the next three kārīkāḥ showing that the loḷottara 'supra-mundane' knowledge through the realization of which one becomes omniscient :

87, 88

savastu sopalambhaṃ ca dvayaṃ laukikam iṣyate । avastu sopalambhaṃ ca śuddhaṃ laukikam iṣyate ॥

avastv anupalambhaṃ ca lokottaram iti smṛtam । jñānaṃ jñeyaṃ ca vijñeyaṃ sadā buddhaiḥ prakīrtitam ॥

'That which consists of the two, the object and (its) perception, is regarded as mundane ; one without the object, but with the perception is regarded as pure mundane ; while one without the object and the perception is said to be supra-mundane.— This is to be understood to be the knowledge and the knowable¹ as is always declared by the Buddhas.'

In our ordinary experience when one perceives a jar there are both the object, the jar, and its perception. This knowledge is called laukika 'mundane', i.e., belonging to or occurring in ordinary life. When one, however, in a higher grade of wisdom, with the clear knowledge of unreality or the imagined or imposed form of the jar, perceives it, that knowledge is with perception, but not with the object. This is called 'pure mundane', i.e., it belongs to ordinary life and is covered (āvṛta); it is pure,—'pure' because it is not so obscure as the mundane, its obscurity having been removed to a great extent. Finally when the reality is perfectly realized, when the mind rests on itself being completely suppressed (niruddha) there is neither the jar, nor the perception, and as such this knowledge is regarded as loṇottara 'supra-mundane,' surpassing the ordinary life.

Of these three kinds of jñāna, viz., (i) laukika, (ii) śuddha laukika, and (iii) loṇottara, the first is well-known to all and is met with in every system ; and the last two are to be found in Yogācāra texts. For instance, MVT¹, p. 19 :

paratantrasvabhāvo hi śuddhalaukikagocarāḥ ।

Tk, p. 40 : nirvikalpalokottarajñānaḥ pariniṣpanne svabhāve adṛṣṭe apratividdhe asākṣātkṛte tatprṣṭhalabdhāśuddhalaikajñānagamyatvāt paratantro 'nyena jñānena na gṛhyate. na punar lokottarajñānaprṣṭhalabdhēnāpi jñānena na dṛśyate.

In LA, p. 156, these jñānas are found as (i) laukika, (ii) loṇottara, and (iii) loṇottaratama respectively. The difference is only in nomenclature and as such is not important. The LA, p. 157, describes them very clearly in the following words which deserve here to be considered carefully :

(i) tatra laukikaṃ jñānaṃ sadasatpakṣābhiniṣṭānaṃ sarvatīrthakarabālapṛthagjanānaṃ ca.

(ii) tatra lokottaraṃ jñānaṃ sarvaśrāvaka-pratyekabuddhānaṃ svasāmānya-lakṣaṇa-patitāśāyābhiniṣṭānaṃ.

(iii) tatra lokottaratamaṃ jñānaṃ buddhabodhisattvānaṃ nirābhāsadharma-pravicayād anirodhānūtpādadarśanāt sadasatpakṣavigataṃ tathāgatabhūminairātmyādhiḡamāt pravartate.²

This reality with which we are concerned here is described by V a s u b a n d h u in his Tk, verse 29 in the following words which may be quoted here :

acitto 'nupalambho 'sau jñānaṃ lokottaraṃ ca tat ।

S t h i r a m a t i comments :

tad anena śloka-dvayena darśanamārgam ārabhyottara-viśeṣagatyā phalasampattir udbhāvitā vijñaptimātrapraviṣṭayogināḥ tatra grāhakacittābhāvād grāhyārthānupalambhāc ca acitto

² Generally in Buddhist works things are divided into two categories (i) laukika, and (ii) loṇottara (see MV, p. 501); as for instance, all mental states are laukika excepting only nine, viz., four paths (maggas), four fruits (magga phalas), and one uncompounded element (asamṅkhatadhātu), i.e., nibbāna—these are loṇottara. DSṇ, § 1093, 1094.

'nupalambho 'sau. aparicitatvāt³ loke samudācārābhāvāt nirvikalpatvāc ca lokād uttīṇam iti jñānaṃ lokottaraṃ ca tat.

So far as goes my information, such division of jñāna or jñeya is not to be found in Upaniṣads.

Ś explains the above three kinds of jñāna as the conditions of (i) waking, (ii) dream, and (iii) sleep respectively (jāgrat, svapna, suṣupti).

³ The printed text reads anucitatvāt, but it does not give any appropriate sense. We should, therefore, read here aparicitatvāt with the Tibetan version which has h̄dris.par.ma.byas.pa.

jñāne ca trividhe jñeye krameṇa vidite svayaṃ |
sarvajñatā hi sarvatra bhavatiha mahādhiyaḥ ||

'The threefold knowledge and knowable being gradually understood everywhere spontaneously evolves here the state of omniscience of a man of high intellect.'

That the jñāna is trividha 'threefold' is just now seen in the preceding two kārikās. According to its function, too, it is trividha. We read in the LA, p. 157 :

tatra trividhaṃ jñānaṃ svasāmānyalakṣaṇādvadhāraṇaṃ cotpādavyayādvadhāraṇaṃ cānutpādānirodhādvadhāraṇaṃ ca.²

The omniscience (sarvajñatā) referred to is Buddhahood (buddhatva).³

¹ The word mahādhi is nothing but dhīmat which is a name for a Bodhisattva. See MSA, XIX. 73; MVt, 1 627.

² As regards the nature of jñāna the following may be cited from LA, p. 157: asaṅgalakṣaṇaṃ jñānaṃ,° asaṅgasvabhāvalakṣaṇaṃ jñānaṃ,° aprāptilakṣaṇaṃ jñānaṃ svapratyātmāryajñānagatigocaram apraveśānirgamatvād udakacandraṇaṃ jale.

³ See BAP, pp. 447-8; ASP, pp. 42-3. Buddhatva = sarvajñatva consisting in (i) sarvākārajñatā, (ii) mārgajñatā, and (iii) vastujñāna.

Ś explains sarvajñatā as sarvaś cāsau jñāś ceti satasya bhāvaḥ sarvajñatā.

In the next kārikā the author tells his followers to understand certain things :

heyajñeyāpyapākyāni vijñeyāny agrayānataḥ¹ |
teṣāṃ anyatra vijñeyād upalambhas triṣu smṛtaḥ

'That which is to be abandoned, that which is to be attained, and that which is to be matured, that which is to be understood from the Agrayāna. It is said that in them there is perception of the three, but not of that which is to be known.'

The Agrayāna in the text is nothing but the Mahāyāna as is evident from a number of Buddhist works in which the word occurs as a synonym for Mahāyāna.²

Now, what are we to understand by heya, etc. regards heya and jñeya, if we follow here Asaṅga they are paratantra and parikalpita svabhāvas (see IV. 88 respectively).³ Āpya (= prāpya) 'attainable' implies

³ Let us quote here the following from the MSA. XI. 13 (p. 58) heya and jñeya are explained :

tattvaṃ yat satataṃ dvayena rahitaṃ bhrāntes ca saṃnīśrayaḥ śakyam naiva ca sarvathābhilapitum yac cāprapañcātmakam |

dhātu or dharmadhātu already alluded to (IV. 81),⁴ which is pariniṣpanna, and pākya 'to be matured' refers to the act of maturing by discipline for the attainment of the Absolute. The last is not only for others, but also for one's own self.⁵

The second half of the kārikā says that among these four things only three, i.e., heya, āpya, and pākya, can be perceived, but not the jñeya or vijñeya. For it is parikalpita 'imagined,' and a thing which is only imagined owing to its very nature cannot be perceived, just like mirage, as it has no existence, it is merely an imagination, simply a name; it is not perceived, and hence there is no perception.⁶

⁶ It may be noted that sometimes five jñeyas are found (BAP, p. 10, jñeyam pañcavidham), as says Sthiramati in MVT¹, p. 6, viz. (i) the worlds (lokaḍhātu), (ii) the living beings (sattva), (iii) the elements of existence (dharmā), (iv) the discipline (vinaya), and (v) the means (upāya). These five are said to have no connexion herewith.

In the next few kārikās the author gives some leading thoughts of the Agrayāna alluded to above:

prakṛtyākāśavaj jñeyāḥ sarve dharmā anādayaḥ |
vidyate na hi nānātvaṃ teṣāṃ kvacana kiñcana ||

'All the elements of existence are without beginning and by nature they are to be known like the sky. Variety they have nowhere any variety.'

For the first half of the kārikā see IV. 1, where we have already seen that things are just like the sky as said in the texts as the ASP, p. 297 : *yathākāśam*⁶ already quoted there.

For the second half where it is said that there is no variety of things see the well-known Upaniṣadic texts : neha nānā kiñcana, BU, IV. 4. 19 ; KU, IV. 11 ; KtU, III. 8 ; NS, 34 ff (with V ā t s y ā y a n a). See also our own text, IV. 94, 100.

ādibuddhāḥ¹ prakṛtyaiva² sarve dharmāḥ suniścitāḥ |
yasyaivaṃ bhavati kṣāntiḥ so 'mṛtatvāya kalpate ||

² See IV. 93.

'By the very nature all elements of existence are well ascertained as originally knowledge. One who has such acquiescence is fit for immortality.'

The word buddha in ādibuddha means here bodha 'knowledge,'³ i.e., advaya jñāna which is called Tathāgata as we have already seen (IV. 82-84). See also SŚP, p. 124 :

tathāgataṃ bhadanta śāradvatīputra paryeṣitukāmenātmaṃ paryeṣitavyaḥ. ātmeti bhadanta śāradvatīputra buddhasyaitad adhivacanam.

All phenomena are only in their imposed or imagined forms, they being buddha, or bodha or jñāna.

Cf. here the well-known phrase in later Vedāntic works⁴:
nityaśuddhabuddhamukṣatasatyasvabhāva for Brāhman.

As regards the meaning of the word *kṣānti*⁵ a few words are required here. Generally, kṣānti means 'patience.' In Buddhism there are different kṣāntis of which the following three are often mentioned : (i) duḥkḥādhiṃvāsānāḥkṣānti 'patience accepting miseries,' (ii) *dharmanidhyāna*⁶ 'patience by meditating upon the elements of existence,' and (iii) *parāpakāra-marṣaṇa*⁶ 'patience bearing injuries done by others.'

Besides, in Buddhism it has other meanings. In explaining kṣānti (Pali kḥanti) in AN, I. 94, the commentary, Manorathapūraṇī, writes: kḥamatīti adhiṃvāsānāḥkḥanti. It says that kḥanti means adhiṃvāsana 'acquiescence,' 'consent,' or 'acceptance.' Again, we read in the AN, III. 118 :

imesaṃ āvuso tiṇṇaṃ puggalānaṃ katamo te puggalo khamati abhikkantataro ca paṇitataro ca.

³ Ś explains : ādibuddhaḥ nityabodhasvarūpaḥ.

⁴ Such as VeS, pp. 38-39 (§ 28).

⁶ As described in BA and BAP, VI (pp. 172 ff); ŚS, IX (pp. 179 ff). Cf. DS, CVII.

The commentary explains kḥamati saying kḥamatīti ruci. Accordingly the passage quoted above may be translated thus :

'Which of these three persons is, O friend, agreeable to you as the most excellent and exalted?'

Here evidently kṣānti is ruci 'pleasure,' 'liking.' This is quite clear also from a passage of the SNt, 897,⁷ where the commentator in his MNs explains kḥanti (kṣānti) in the text pema (preman) 'fondness, predilection,' chanda 'desire,' rāga 'lust,' which are in fact, the same as ruci.⁸

Again, in Buddhist texts (CN, p. 164, see Vbh, p. 164) kṣānti is described as synonymous with the following words : (i) drṣṭi (Pali diṭṭhi) 'view,' 'belief,' 'theory,' (ii) ruci 'pleasure,' 'liking,' (iii) labdhi (Pali laddhi) 'view,' 'belief,' 'theory,' (iv) adhyāśaya (Pali ajjhāśaya) 'intention,' 'thought,' and (v) abhiprāya (Pali adhippāya) 'intention,' 'opinion.' It is therefore quite clear from the above that kṣānti sometimes means drṣṭi 'view'.⁹ And so far as I can understand in the present case it is used in this sense.

See SP, p. 136 ; MSA, XI. 52 ; SRS, VII ; DS, p. 136. P o u s s i n : MV, pp. 362ff., and AK, VI, pp. 165 ff., as well as the works quoted herein ; St. LA, p. 396.

⁷ yā kāc'imaṃ sammutiyo puthujjā sabbā 'va etā na upeti vidvā !

anūpayo so upayaṃ kim eyya diṭṭhe sute khamti akubbamāno ||

⁸ See SN, IV. 348 : bhūtapubbaṃ bhaṇte cattāro satthāro nānādinānākhantikā nānārucikā ; MN, I. 487, II. 43. See also the Sumaṅgalavāṇī on DN, II. 213 : khamti tattha katamā khamti. yā khamanāṭā adhiṃvāsa-acaṇḍikkam anasuro po attamanatā cittassati evaṃ vuttā adhiṃvāsanaḥkhamti.

⁹ It may be noted that in Sanskrit, too, √kṣam is not always used in the sense of 'to be patient,' or 'to endure,' etc. Cf. UC, I. 14 : tan na uktam aśiṃ na hi tat kṣamaṃ te. Here kṣama has nothing to do with 'patience' or 'forbearance,' etc. In Pali (DhA, I. 40) √kḥama is said to mean 'to be fit,' 'to seem good,' specially in such cases as yathā te kḥameyya 'may seem good to you.'

It is well-known in Prajñāpāramitāsūtras and the works based thereon that all elements of existence are devoid of the characteristics of their own (niḥsvabhāva), they neither originate (anutpanna), nor disappear (aniruddha), and as such they are quiescent from the outset (ādiśānta=prakṛtiśānta), and by the very nature they are merged in nirvāṇa (prakṛtinirvṛta). This point is mainly described in the following kārikā :

ādiśāntā¹ hy anutpannāḥ prakṛtyaiva sunirvṛtāḥ |
sarve dharmāḥ samābhinnā ajam sāmyaṃ² viśaradam³ |

'All elements of existence are quiescent from the outset, non-originated, and by the very nature perfectly merged in nirvāṇa; they are all equal and not different. (The absolute) is unborn, equal and fearless.'

Let us quote here the following from MSA, XI. 51 :

niḥsvabhāvatayā siddhā uttarottaraniśrayāt |
anutpannāniruddhādiśāntaprakṛtinirvṛtāḥ ||⁴

Here follows the commentary :

niḥsvabhāvatayānutpādādayaḥ. yo hi niḥsvabhāvaḥ so 'nutpanno yo 'nutpannaḥ so 'niruddho yo 'niruddhaḥ sa ādiśānto ya ādiśāntaḥ sa prakṛtinirvṛtaḥ.

² See III. 2, 38; IV. 77, 80, 95, 100.

³ See the note on vaiśaradya in the next kārikā. Cf. nirbhaya in I. 25, III. 35; and abhaya in IV. 78, and Upaniṣads, ChU, I. 4. 4, 5; IV. 15. 1. etc.

⁴ This is as reconstructed by L é v i according to the Chinese version. The original Sanskrit is lost. The scribe has, however, given here a corrupted kārikā and it is as follows :

niḥsvabhāvatayā siddhā uttarottaraniśrayāḥ |
anutpādo 'niruddhaś cādiśāntiḥ parinirvṛtiḥ ||

See MSA., Tome II (French Translation), p. 122.

'Owing to the absence of nature there are no origination, etc. That which is devoid of nature is not originated; that which is not originated is not suppressed (destroyed); that which is not suppressed is quiescent from the outset; and that which is quiescent from the outset is naturally merged in perfect nirvāṇa.

In the text śānti (connected with ādiśānta) and nirvṛti or nirvāṇa (connected with sunirvṛta=parinirvṛta) are actually nothing but appravṛtti meaning 'not coming forth,' 'not arising,' 'not originating.' Elements of existence are ādiśānta and sunirvṛta (= pari-) nirvṛta; it implies that originally they do not originate and so to speak, they are in śānti and nirvāṇa. For the above explanation of the two words see MV, p. 529: yā'pravṛtitan nirvāṇam iti vyavasthāpyate; p. 538: ya upaśamo 'pravṛtitan nirvāṇam.

Poussin observes (ERE, Vol. 9, p. 851): "From an absolute point of view (paramārthataḥ) there is no difference (nānābhāva)⁵ among things and the characters of things. Things are void (śūnya) like the daughter of a barren woman. Characters are void like the beauty of this unreal daughter. Things are void, because there is no real origination of things—if no origination, no destruction, an eternal non-existence. There is no difference between existence (saṃsāra) and nirvāṇa. Not being produced (anutpanna), not being destroyed, things are from the beginning quiescent (ādiśānta), they are really, natural (prakṛtyā) in nirvāṇa (parinirvṛta)."

For the wording and thought of the first half of the kārikā the following passages, besides MSA, XI. 51 already cited (p. 204), may be quoted :

(i) ādiśāntā hy anutpannāḥ prakṛtyaiva ca nirvṛtāḥ |
dharmās te vivṛtā nātha dharmacakrapravartane ||⁶

The next kārikā is in support of what is said in the preceding one :

94

vaiśāradyaṃ tu vai nāsti bhedē vicaratām sadā |
 bhedanīmnaḥ pṛthagvādās tasmāt te kṛpaṇāḥ smṛtāḥ ||

'But verily those who always move following difference have no intrepidity. Those who maintain that a thing is diverse¹ (pṛthak=nānā) are prone to difference, and are, therefore, regarded as pitiable.'

The word visārada in IV. 93 of which the noun, vaiśāradya, is used here requires some explanation. According to Ś they mean 'pure' (viśuddha) and 'purity' (viśuddhi) respectively. It is supported by Bhojarāja saying in his vṛtti on YS, I. 47 that vaiśāradya means 'clearness' (nairmalya). This exposition is based on that of Vyāsa on the same YS.² The idea behind it may be explained in another way.³

 bhyām anabhibhūtaḥ svacchāḥ sthitipravāho vaiśāradyam. Wood translates it thus: 'When freed from obstruction by impurity the sattva of thinking substance, the essence of which is light, has a pellucid steady flow not overwhelmed by rajas and tamas.'

³ As in India the season śarad 'autumn' is particularly clear, anything in that season (śārada 'autumnal'), such as the moon or water, is also clear. Thus śārada with the prefix vi- which here simply emphasizes the idea might have gradually been employed in the sense of 'clear,' its noun vaiśāradya meaning 'clearness'.

The word visārada is, however, of doubtful derivation. The prefix vi- only intensifies the meaning of śārada one of the meanings of which is 'mature,' i.e., 'rich in years' (śarad 'a year'), 'old.' Accordingly the secondary meaning with the prefix vi- is praviṇa 'clever.' As boldness (pragalbha) generally depends on one's maturity visārada also means 'bold' (pragalbha).

In both Sanskrit and Pali the word śārada (Pali sārada) means apratibha or apragalbha 'timid,' 'not bold,'⁵ and visārada (visārada) is used to mean 'scholar' (pañḍita) and 'bold' (pragalbha).⁶

In Buddhist writings vaiśāradya (Pali vesārajja) is explained as opposite to śāradya* (Pali sārajja)⁷ which means 'timid.' That vaiśāradya is 'intrepidity' (nirbhaya) is very clearly seen in AKV², p. 646.⁸ In Buddhism vaiśāradya is four-fold, the vaiśāradya regarding (i) the highest knowledge of all things (sarvadharmābhisambodhivaiśāradya), (ii) the knowledge of destroying all the human passions (sarvāsraṇḍayajñāna) (iii) rightly describing the impediments (antarāyikadharmāṇāṃ nanyathātvaniścitaṇḍayakāraṇa), and (iv) the rightness of the path leading to salvation (nairyaṇīkapatipattatātvatva).⁹

⁴ It is read in the group of dṛghādi (Pāṇini, V. 1. 123), and Varad-māna explains it in his GM, p. 221, taking it in the sense of praviṇa 'skil'clever': śāradaśabdaḥ pratyagravācī. yathā rajjuśāradaṃ udakam, dṛṣṭacchā-saktavaḥ. sadyo hi rajjvoddhṛtam udakam pratyagram anupahataṃ rajjuśārabhinavatvam. tad vigatam asya viśāradaḥ praviṇaḥ. praviṇo lakṣaṇayā.

 himself is, however, not satisfied with it and goes on to say: athavā vyutpattiḥ praviṇavācī viśāradaśabdaḥ.

⁵ See AmK, III. 3. 95: *dvau tu śāradau | pratyagrāpratibhau vidvats-

⁸ nirbhaya hi vaiśāradyam. The Tib. term for vaiśāradya is mi.hji which means nirbhaya or nirbhaya.

⁹ MV¹, 8. In the same work (28) there is a different kind of vaiśāradya which is also four-fold. Again, the following four-fold vaiśāradya is enume-

By modern scholars viśāradya is variously explained or translated. Childers says (Dictionary, p. 564) it is 'confidence or fearlessness,' evidently taking viśārada to mean 'bold' (pragalbha). Lévi explains it as 'assurance' (MSA, French tr., p. 319), Kern in his Eng. translation of SP¹ (SBE, Vol. XXI), p. 246, interprets (referring to Burnouf: Lotus, p. 396; S. Hardy: Eastern Monachism, p. 291) it as 'absence of hesitation.' But to be consistent with the explanations offered by Vyāsa and Bhojarāja, Kern's exposition of the word in his Histoire du Bouddhisme dans l'Inde (French translation by G. Huet in the Annales du Musée Guimet, Tome X), Tome I, p. 283, deserves to be consulted in this connection.

in the MVu, Vol. II, p. 261: (i) kāya°, (ii) vācā°, (iii) citta° and (iv) pr̥thu°. The last term is not clear, and Senart supposes (p. 545) that it is pr̥thag°. Still it is to be ascertained.

In Śīlāṅka's ṭīkā on SKr, XIV. 17, viśārada (Pkt. viśāraya) is explained as pratipādaka.

'But only those who are quite certain about the aja 'unborn' and sām̐ya 'same'¹ are possessed of great wisdom. The people, however, do not penetrate into it.'²

² It refers to aja and sām̐ya in the text. Ś explains tat taking it to signify the vartman 'way' of the sages which an ordinary man cannot grasp. Here Ś quotes the following from the MB(?) :

sarvabhūtātmaḥbhūtasya sarvabhūtaḥbhūtasya ca |
devā api mārge muhyanty apadasya padaiṣṇaḥ |
śakuninām ivākāśe gatiḥ naivopalabhyate ||

The first two lines with some variations in c are quoted also by Sāyaṇa in his commentary on the TA, VIII. 2 (p. 547). For śakuninām° see Ś on BU, p. 637: ta utsahante kṛte 'pi śakunam padam draṣṭum; DP, 92-93 (with Atthakathā): ākāśe 'va sakuntānam gati tesam durannayā; Again, antarikṣi śakunasya

Until and unless the knowledge becomes completely free from any relation to its object the highest cannot be attained. Therefore the knowledge must be asaṅga, i.e., detached from its objects. This state of its detachment is described in the following two kārikās (96, 97), the first of which runs :

vā padam, quoted from Āryaratnāḥarasūtra in MV, 90; tad yathāpi nāmākaḥ śakunipadam, SSP, p. 137; yathāntarikṣe śakuneḥ padam budhair, vaktum śakyam na ca darśanopagam, quoted by Poussin in his French tr. of M. p. 12 in Le Muséon, 1907, p. 261.

See IV. 72, 79 (niḥsaṅga), 97, 99; cf. agraha, III. 32. See also IV. 72 :

(its) being always free from attachment (asaṅgatā), not to speak of the disappearance of the covering.'

The state of being always asaṅga of jñāna or citta is referred to in the preceding kārikā (96).

As regards āvaraṇa 'covering' or 'obstruction', it is two-fold, (i) kleśa-āvaraṇa and (ii) *jñeya-āvaraṇa*². kleśa literally means that which troubles one by the strokes of various kinds of misery, as Vācaspati Miśra would explain it (YS, I. 24). Accordingly, as sinful desires, vices, or passions are for misery they are termed kleśa. For the same reason it also means 'impurity', 'stain'. Sometimes the word stands for 'lust' or 'sensuality' (rāga), 'aversion' (dveṣa), and 'bewilderment' (moha). There are also ten kleśas, lobha, dveṣa, moha, māna, etc. (DSṇ. §1548).³ For further details see Pali-English Dictionary, PTS, s.v. kleśa, and MV, p. 361. Kleśa-āvaraṇa thus means the āvaraṇa 'covering' or 'obstruction' in the form of kleśas. Until and unless they are destroyed (kleśaprahāṇa) the truth is not manifested, nor can one attain to the highest bliss.⁴ Kleśas are regarded as the mother of all miseries. Similarly jñeya is also an āvaraṇa. The word jñeya means 'knowable,' i.e., the *dharma*s 'elements of existence' which are not substantial and thus they have no reality. Yet one perceives them (jñeyopalabdhi). And as long as one continues to do so one is far from the goal. Thus jñeya is regarded as an āvaraṇa,⁵

² DS, CXV; MSA, IX. 3, 12, XX-XXI, 44; BA, IX. 55.

³ In YS, II. 3, 5-9, there are five kinds of kleśa, viz., avidyā, asmitā, rāga, dveṣa, and abhiniveśa.

⁴ See MV, p. 538: kleśānām apravṛtṭyā vā prapañcōpaśamaḥ.

⁵ BAP, pp. 447: *kleśā evāvṛtiḥ. jñeyam cāvṛtir āvaraṇam. jñeyam eva samāropitarūpatvād āvṛtiḥ. Sometimes jñeyāvaraṇa is explained as jñeye āvaraṇam (Tk, p. 15: jñeyāvaraṇam api sarvasmin jñeye jñānapratibandhabhūtam akliṣṭam ajñānam), 'the obstacle regarding the knowable,' (i.e., the reality or the things in their true nature). See TSP, pp. 869-890. Sometimes (AN, III. 436; AK, IV. p. 201) there are three āvaraṇas, (i) kleśāvaraṇa, (ii) karmāvaraṇa (5 ānantaryas and 10 akuśala karmapathas), and (iii) vipākāvaraṇa (8 aḥṣaṇas).

and it must be removed (jñeyānupalabdhi) for the realization of nirvāṇa. Jñeyāvaraṇa disappears by one's realizing the unreality of the elements of existence as separate entities (dharma-nairātmya), while kleśāvaraṇa goes away by the realization of the unreality of the individual ego (pudgalanairātmya).⁶ Or both the āvaraṇas can be removed by the meditation on śūnyatā (BA, IX. 55).

The removal of āvaraṇa is referred to in the preceding kārikā, but in the next kārikā it is said that, in fact, there is no āvaraṇa at all:

98

alabdhāvaraṇāḥ sarve dharmāḥ prakṛtinirmalāḥ |

'All the elements of existence have always been without any covering and unsullied in their nature. From the beginning they are knowledge as well as in nirvāṇa (mukta)—this the Buddhas understand.'

For ādau buddhāḥ see IV. 92, 93. Because the elements of existence do not originate they are said as mukta, i.e., in śānti or nirvāṇa. On this see IV. 93, p. 205.

For prakṛtinirmala see IV. 91; MV, p. 539:

ādiśuddham anutpannam niḥsvabhāvam anāvilam |

In the kārikā the word nāyaka is a name for the Buddha, MV¹, §1. 20; AP, 4. 725; BA, II. 31, 66; ŚS, p. 5, l. 8.

Let us remember here that at the very beginning of the present Chapter (IV. 1) the author has told us, that in the opinion of 'the greatest of men' (dvīpadāṃ vara), i.e. the Buddha, jñāna and jñeya are identical. He has also repeatedly shown above¹ and specially in IV. 96, that jñāna is asaṅga as it does not relate itself to the *dharma*s or objects which have no reality. The author refers now to this fact and concludes showing the supreme truth that according to the Buddha there is in reality neither the jñāna nor the jñeya or *dharma*s as he has said neither of them :

99

sarvadharmās tathā jñānaṃ naitad buddhena bhāṣitam ||

'According to the Buddha who instructs the way known to him (tāyin),² jñāna does not approach the *dharma*s (i.e., it does not relate itself to the objects).³ But all *dharma*s as well as jñāna—this has not been said by the Buddha.'

¹ See IV. 72, 79, 96. Cf. III. 32.

² The word tāyin is thus interpreted in BAP, p. 75: tāyinām iti. svādhigatamārgadeśakānām. yad uktam tāyaḥ svadṛṣṭamārgoktiḥ (PV, 2 145). See my paper, Pramāṇavārttika of Dharmakīrti, IHQ, Vol. XIII, 1937. This explanation is partly followed by Udayanācārya in his Tātparyafikā-parisuddhi, Bib. Ind., p. 8 in explaining tāyin in Vācaspati Miśra's Tātparyafikā, 2 (akṣapādāya tāyine): tāyī tattvādhyavasāyasamprakṣaṇakṣamasampradāyapravartakaḥ. Prajñākaramati in his BAP, p. 75, offers another explanation: athavā tāyaḥ santānārthaḥ. āsaṃsāram apratiṣṭhita-nirvāṇatayā avasthāyinām. This word is widely used both in Buddhist (LV, p. 421; BA, III. 2; SP¹, pp. 25, 57, 67, etc.) and Jaina (YŚ, Vol. I, pp. 1, 47; DV, p. 115) works and is misunderstood. Sometimes it is read as trāyin 'protector,' and tāpin (as in the present case, see Variants'. The word tāyin as a name for Buddha is translated into Tibetan by sky.b.pa (MVt¹, §1. 15) which suggests its Sanskrit equivalent trāyin 'a protector.' See JRS, 1910, p. 140; JPTS, 1891-1893, p. 53; JA, 1912, p. 243; Proceedings and Transactions of the Second Oriental Conference, Calcutta, 1922, pp. 450-1.

³ See IV. 96.

What is the significance of the second half of the kārikā: 'all *dharma*s as well as jñāna—this has not been said by the Buddha?' Let us quote here a few passages showing that the Buddha has never said a word.

avāca 'nakṣarāḥ sarva śūnyāḥ.⁵

Let us now make an attempt to understand the significance of such passages as cited above saying that the Buddha said nothing.

This statement is on two grounds, (i) *pratyātmadharma*tā, i.e., the nature of (the highest truth) which is realized in one's own self, and (ii) *paurāṇasthitidharma*tā, i.e., the nature of the elements of existence that remains from the past. This requires some explanation. As regards the first it is held that the transcendental truth (paramārtha) springs up only as an inward conviction (pratyātmavedya), it cannot be attained through instruction from another (aparapratyaya = paropadeśa-gamyā), for it cannot be expressed by any speech or word. So we are told that for the noble the transcendental truth is silence.⁶ This is well-known also in the Vedānta.⁷ Candrakīrti writes (MV, p. 493) :

⁵ See IV. 98 where the kārīkā is entirely quoted.

⁶ MV, p. 56 : paramārtho hy āryāṇāṃ tūṣṇīmabhavaḥ.

⁷ TU, II. 4. 1 : yato vāco nivartante aprāpya manasā saha ; KU, II. 3 ; BS, III. 2. 17 ; The Basic Conception of Buddhism, pp. 19 ff.

Thus the Buddha did not say anything in fact, yet the people according to their own dispositions think that he did. We read therefore in a text, Tathāgataguhyasūtra, quoted in MV, p. 539, just after the passage (ii) cited above :

atha ca yathābhimuktāḥ sarvasattvā nānādhātvāśāyās tathā vividhāṃ tathāgatavācāṃ niścaranti saṃjānanti. teṣāṃ eva pṛthag pṛthag bhavati. ayaṃ bhagavān asmabhyam imāṃ dharmāṃ deśayati. vayaṃ ca tathāgatasya dharmadeśanāṃ śṛṇūmaḥ. tatra tathāgato na kalpayati na vikalpayati sarvāṃ kalpavikalpajālāvāsanāprapañcavigato hi śāntātmate tathāgato vistaraḥ.⁸

Continues MV :

yadi tarhy evaṃ [na] kvacit kasyaci[t kaścīd] dharmā buddhena deśitas tat katham ima ete vicitraḥ pravacanavyavahāra jñāyante. ucyate. avidyānidrānugātānāṃ dehīnāṃ svapnā yamānānāṃ iva svavikalpābhyaḥ eṣaḥ ayaṃ bhagavān sakalatribhuvanasurāsuranaranātha imaṃ asmabhyam deśayati.

The following may also be quoted here from the LA, p. 19 :

na ca mahāmate tathāgatā akṣarapatitaḥ dharmā deśayan punar mahāmate yo 'kṣarapatitaḥ dharmā deśayati sa pralapā nirakṣaratvād dharmasya. ata etasmāt kīraṇān mahāmate ukta deśanāpāṭhe mayānyaiś ca buddhabodhisattvair yathāikam akṣaram tathāgatā nodāharanti na vyāharanti. tat kaścīd hetor yad utānakṣaratvād dharmāṇāṃ. na ca nārthopasaṃhitā udāharanti. udāharanty eva vikalpam upādāyānupadāyā mahāmate sarvadharmāṇāṃ śāsanalopaḥ syāt.⁹

And the conclusion arrived at here is that one should rest on the sense and not on letters, for one who rests on letters not only ruins oneself, but also cannot make others understand.

⁸ In Buddhist Sanskrit texts we have often °saraṇa for °saraṇa in such contexts.

The second ground is this : The Buddha has said nothing, because what he is reported to have said was from the past. Nothing depends on the birth or absence of birth of the Tathāgatas, the true nature of elements of existence remains always the same. This is meant by the statement that the speech of the Buddha is no speech (avacanam buddhavacanam). Taking both the grounds together the LA, pp. 143-144, says :

yad idam uktaṃ bhagavatā yāṃ ca rātriṃ tathāgato 'bhisambuddho yāṃ ca rātriṃ parinirvāsyati atrāntara ekam apy akṣaram tathāgatena nodāhṛtaṃ na pravāharīsyati avacanam buddhavacanam iti. kim idam sandhāyoktaṃ.° bhagavān āha. dharmadvayaṃ mahāmate sandhāya mayaitad uktaṃ. katamad dharmadvayaṃ. yaduta pratyātmadharmaṭāṃ ca paurāṇasthiti-dharmaṭāṃ ca.° utpādād vā tathāgatānām anutpādād vā tathāgatānām sthitaivaiṣāṃ dharmāṇāṃ dharmatā dharmasthītā dharmaniyāmatā paurāṇanagaramahāpathavan mahāmate.° tad yathā mahāmate kaścid eva puruṣo 'tavyāṃ paryaṭan paurāṇam nagaram anupaśyed avikalapathapraveśaṃ. sa taṃ nagaram anupraviśet tatra praviśya pratiniśīya nagaram nagarakriyāsukham anubhavet. tat kiṃ manyase mahāmate api nu tena puruṣeṇa sa panthā utpādito yena pathā taṃ nagaram anupraviśo nagara-vaicitryaṃ ca. āha. no bhagavan. bhagavān āha. evam eva mahāmate yan mayā taiś ca tathāgatair adhigataṃ sthitaivaiṣā dharmatā dharmasthītā dharmaniyāmatā tathatā bhūtā satyatā. ata etasmāt kāraṇān mahāmate mayedaṃ uktaṃ yāṃ ca rātriṃ tathāgato 'bhisambuddho yāṃ ca rātriṃ parinirvāsyati atrāntara ekam apy akṣaram tathāgatena nodāhṛtaṃ nodāharīsyati.

The following may also be quoted here from the VCh, p. 243 just after the passage (viii) cited above :

tat kasya hetoḥ. yo 'sau tathāgatena dharmo 'bhisambuddho deśito vā agrāhyaḥ so 'nabhiḥpyaḥ. na sa dharmo nādharmāḥ. tat kasya hetoḥ. asaṃskṛtaprabhāvitā hy āryapudgalāḥ.

It is thus quite reasonable that the author should declare at the end of his discussion the transcendental truth of jñāna and jñeya or dharma which he begins the chapter with and discusses it throughout.

In the last kārikā of his work the author pays his homage to the highest truth to be realized, i.e., nirvāṇa of the Buddhists, and Brahman of the Vedāntins ;

Here ends, in the Āgamaśāstra of Gaṇḍapāda,

Book Four called the Cessation of the Fire-brand.'

The word pada 'state' in Buddhist literature is used also to mean nirvāṇa.⁶ But though it cannot be taken as a peculiarity in that literature, for the word is employed in the similar sense, i.e., mokṣa or Brahman also in Brāhmaṇical works,⁷ one is inclined to take it in the sense of nirvāṇa considering all that is discussed in this chapter. The two epithets durdaśa and atigambhīra strengthen the view. In Buddhist literature sudurdṣa (Pali sududdasa) is given as a synonym for nirvāṇa (AP, 7) and the words durdṣa (Pali duddasa) 'difficult to be seen' and gambhīra 'deep' are frequently used in connection with it.⁸

The word bala 'power' in yathābala refers to the well-known five-fold bala in Buddhism, viz., (1) śraddhā-bala, (2) vīrya°, (3) smṛti°, (4) samādhi°, and (5) prajñā°, or the power of faith, energy, recollection, contemplation, and wisdom respectively.⁹ By using the word it is implied that nirvāṇa is realized by the exercise of the five-fold power referred to.

In the colophon for alāta 'fire-brand' see IV. 47-50. The use of the word alātaśānti 'cessation of the fire-brand' is very significant and appropriate indicating the quintessence of what is discussed herein.

Poussin has traced (JRAS, 1910, p. 135) the simile of the firebrand (alātacakṛa) in the MU,¹⁰ VI. 24.¹¹ But this simile can in no way be connected with the name of the present chapter, alātaśānti. For the use of the simile in that Up, is ⁹ AN, III. 12; DN, II. 120; etc., DS, XLVIII. These five are well-known also in the system of Yoga (YS, I. 20), though these are not described here as bala. According to scholiasts śraddhā implies the clearness (samprasāda, prasāda) of the mind. Vasubandhu (AK, VIII. 9) is of the same opinion. See ibid, also II. 25.

¹⁰ Maitrāyaṇa Brāhmaṇa Up. is another name for it. But it does not show any Vedic traces. From its language, style, and contents it appears that it belongs to a considerably later period.

not for showing any unreality of Brahman but simply for indicating his splendour. On the other hand, here in our work as well as in Buddhist works, frequently, and in every case so far as goes my information, it is used as one of the numerous symbols of unreality.¹² The following may be quoted here from CS, 325:

Poussin observes (JRAS, 1910, p. 136) that the title of the fourth Chapter, alātaśānti, cannot be said so far to be Buddhist, as the phrase alātaśānti has not been traced in Buddhist books. We cannot however, think so. For, it may equally be said that it is not traced in any Brāhmaṇic work older than the ĀŚ.¹³ Now, it may not be traced in Buddhist works, but the word alāta as a symbol of unreality according to the Buddhists, of which their works are full,¹⁴ is very well known. Gaṇḍapāda himself has used it as such in his ĀŚ not less than four times (IV. 47-50). He has shown taking the stand of a Buddhist, the unreality of the visible world comparing it with alāta, and finding out the cause of its appearance and showing thereby as to how it ceases. And if it is so, we cannot say that the title of the chapter is not Buddhist.

¹² Such as marumarīcikā, gandharvanagara, kṛpaśpa. See MVt, 139. 21.

¹³ A similar phrase, mṛgatṛṣṇājālabhrāntiśānti, occurs in YV, III. 6. 2.

TRANSLATION

1

Om, this syllable is all this. Its further explanation is: the past, the present, the future—all this is verily om. And whatever else that is beyond the three times, that, too, is verily Om.

2

Verily all this is Brahman; this self (ātman) is Brahman. This same self has four fourths.

The first fourth is the Vaiśvānara 'common-to-all-men,' i.e., universal, (active) in the waking state, cognitive outwardly, having seven limbs¹ and nineteen mouths² enjoying the gross.

¹ According to Ś who follows here ChāU, V. 18. 2, these seven limbs are described thus: The very bright one (sutejas), i.e., the heaven is the head. One with various forms (viśvarūpa), i.e., the sun is the eye. That which has various paths, i.e., the wind is the breath. The extended space (bahula) is the body. Wealth (i.e., water) is the bladder. And the earth is the feet. Here in the ChāU the number is more than seven.

² I.e., the means for experience of objects. According to Ś these are the following: The five organs of sense (buddhindriya), the five organs of action (karmendriya), the five vital breaths (prāṇa), the mind (manas), the intellect (buddhi), egoism (ahaṅkāra), and thinking (citta). For an explanation of the last four one may be referred to the following:

mano buddhir ahaṅkāraś cittaṃ karaṇam āntaram |

saṁśayo niścayo garvaḥ smaraṇam viśayā ime |

These are regarded as 'mouths,' because these are the instruments with which one experiences the objects.

4

The second fourth is the Taijasa 'brilliant,' (active) in the dreaming state, cognitive inwardly, having seven limbs and nineteen mouths, enjoying the subtle.

5

That is deep sleep in which one asleep desires no desire whatsoever, nor does he see any dream.

The third fourth is Prājña 'wise.' He is in the sphere of deep sleep, and just unified, a cognition-mass, consisting of bliss and enjoying bliss having the mind as mouth.

6

This is the lord of all, this is the knower of all, this is the controller of all. This is the source of all, for this is the origin and end of beings.

7

Not inwardly cognitive, not outwardly cognitive, not both-wise cognitive, not a cognition-mass, not cognitive, not non-cognitive, not seen, not to be dealt with, not graspable, having no distinctive marks, not thinkable, not to be defined, the essence of the consciousness of the oneness of the self, the cessation of the expression,³ quiescent, blissful, without a second—(such) they think is the fourth. He is the self. He is to be realized.

8

The same self is om from the point of view of a syllable, and from the point of view of its measure, the fourths are measures and the measures are fourths, and they are A, U and M.

³ Or, the expansion of the universe, as explained generally.

Vaiśvānara 'common-to-all-men' who is (active in) the waking state is the first measure, A, on account of its obtaining⁴ (āpti), or on account of its being the first. Verily, indeed, he obtains all desires and becomes first, who knows thus.

10

Taijasa 'brilliant' who is (active in) the sleeping state is the second measure, U, on account of exaltation or intermediateness.

Verily, indeed, he exalts the continuity of knowledge, becomes equal,⁵ and none who does not know Brahman is born in the family of him who knows thus.

11

Prājña 'wise' who is (active in) the state of deep sleep is the third measure, M, on account of measuring and immersing.

Verily, indeed, he measures all this and becomes (its) immersing—he who knows thus.

12

The fourth is without any measure, with which there can be no dealing, it is cessation of expression, blissful, without the second. Thus om is the self, indeed. Enters he with his self into the self—he who knows thus.

Here ends the Upaniṣad called M ā ṇ ḍ ū k y a.

⁴ Or, pervading.

INTRODUCTION

P. xlix, note 2. Certainly this reason dr̥śyatva is not in our text, but in Śaṅkara's own commentary (II. 4: dr̥śyatvād iti hetuḥ). It may be noted here in this connexion that in the later Vedāntic works dr̥śyatva is one of the main hetus for inferring that the outward world is false (Advaitasiddhi, Advaitamañjarī ed., p. 2: vimataṃ mithyā dr̥śyatvād).

P. lxxxix. As regards the commentary on the NUTU, I am thankful to Sachindra Nath Ghose of Benares for his kindly sending me a transcription of it made by himself in Bengali characters from a MS in the library called Mālatīsārādāsādana of Rāy Govinchandji in Benares. It is not complete and runs up to pratyagekaraṣaḥ of the original text in the ninth and the last section. Yet, it contains a separate loose page in which the last portion of the commentary is copied. Here in some of the colophons it is called Vivaraṇa, while in others Vivṛti. According to the present MS this commentary is by Gauḍapāda as is quite clear from the colophons, some reading Śrīgauḍapādiya° and others °śrīśukayogīndraśiṣyaśrīgauḍapādācāryakṛti°. It begins thus:

It is interesting to note that the following passage from this Vivaraṇa (pp. 25-26) is identical with that in

Ś a ṇ k a r a ' s commentary on the MāU, II, excepting a few unimportant variations as noted in the foot-notes :

verses we can gather that jīva, cit, ātman, brahman, śūnya, nairātmya, etc., are the different expressions of citta. From the same authority (III. 122. 35) we also know that such names are made by the authors of śāstras in order to supply some terms required by them :

BOOK I

5. It is quoted in ŚV, p. 27.

6. On the creation from Prāṇa see KtU, III. 3 and BS, I. 1. 23, 28. Here in the kārīkā we have an Idealistic view (Vijñānavāda).

9. For āplakāma see BU, IV. 4. 6. For bhogārtham sṛṣṭiḥ see Śrīdharaśvāmin on BP, III. 7. 4: avidyopādher jivasya bhogārtham īśvaraḥ sṛṣṭyādi karoti.

10. See BU, IV. 2. 4; 4. 22; 5. 15.

12. The word sarvadṛś in sense is the same as sarvajña 'omniscient' (III. 36). His omniscience is, according to Śāṅkara (BS, I. 1. 4), on account of his capacity for all knowledge (sarvajñānaśaktimattvenaiva sarvajñātvam abhyupagantavyam), or owing to the fact that he is never dissociated from his intelligence, i.e., all-embracing knowledge (Op. cit., I. 3. 42: sarvajñātvalakṣaṇayā prajñayā niyatam aviyoḡāt).

On this kārīkā as well as on I. 15 see Upadeśa-sāhasrī, XVIII. 26.

13. In this and the following kārīkā nidrā in sense is, in fact, suṣupta. Here nidrā is said to be bija 'seed', i.e., origin, because nidrā being non-realization of truth is the cause of both dream and waking. See Upadeśa-sāhasrī, XVIII. 26 as quoted in NSi, IV. 43: suṣuptākhyam tamo 'jñānam bijam svapnaprabodhayoḡ | ātmabodhāgnidagdhām syād bijam dagdhām yathābhavam ||

This explanation of bija slightly differs from the one given before on p. 6.

14. See I. 16; III. 35. 36; IV. 81. In the fourth state, Turya, there is no nidrā nor svapna. In such cases while nidrā means the laya or mūḍha 'infatuated' state of the mind, svapna indicates the state called vikṣepa 'distraction'. This state of Turya is the state of Brahman.

15. For b of the kārīkā cf. YS, I. 10: abhāva-pratyayālambanā vṛttir nidrā. This kārīkā is quoted in NSi, IV. 42.

16. This kārīkā is quoted in MnU, I. 13, with the reading ajanmanidram for ajam anidram in c.

17. The following is quoted as from Gaṇḍapāda in Śāṅkara's Viṣṇusahasranāma-bhāṣya, Mysore ed., p. 18:

yad yad dvaitam prapañcasya tan nivartyam hi cetasā |
manovṛttimayam dvaitam advaitam paramārthataḥ ||

19. The Praṇava-upāsana referred to here is well-known in Upaniṣads, older and later alike (ChU, I. 1. 1, 4. 1; PU, V. 1-2; TU, I. 8. 1; MuU, II. 2. 6; MU, IV. 4. 37). Here a few words are necessary for the real significance of upāsana (sometimes upāsana), which is enjoined (yuñjīta praṇave cetaḥ, I. 25) and described to some extent here by our author. The word upāsana is derived, as well-known to all, from upa-√ās literally 'to seat near at hand (in order to honour or wait upon)', and figuratively 'to do homage, worship, be devoted to', etc. But in such Upaniṣadic texts as mano brahmety upāsita (ChU, III. 18. 1), or, sa yo nāma brahmety upāste (Op. cit., VII. 1. 5), it has some special meaning. The first sentence quoted above does not mean 'One should worship the mind as Brahman,' nor do we understand from the second sentence 'He who worships the name as Brahman.' In both of the cases upa-√ās or upāsana gives the sense of meditation (dhyāna). It is in the words of Ś a ṇ k a r a a continuous flow of one and the same idea having an ālambana 'support' recommended by the scripture, unmixed with other ideas. (BS, IV. 1. 7: upāsanaṃ nāma samānapratyayapравāharaṇam. See ChU, I. 1. 1 and our text, p. 48). 'The best ālambana for the upāsana of Brahman, as in the present case, is Om. We read in the KU, I. 2. 17:

etad ālambanaṃ śreṣṭham etad ālambanaṃ param |
etad ālambanaṃ jñātvā brahmaloke mahīyate||

The meditation of Om as Brahman, just as the meditation of an image (pratimā) as Viṣṇu 'the all-pervading one', is the means for the realization of Brahman. It is to be noted, according to Ś a ṇ k a r a's school, that while Brahmajñāna leads one immediately and directly to mokṣa, Brahma-upāsana does not do so, it helps one in gradually attaining to it and to prosperity. Ś a ṇ k a r a says, it effects the purity of the mind and making the truth clear thereby helps us in acquiring the knowledge of Brahman. Besides, there being an ālambana 'support' it is easy to make an upāsana.

It is to be further noted that there are two kinds of upāsana, that involving the contemplation of the Self (ahamgrahopāsana), and that which is symbolical or concerned with external symbols (pratīkopāsana). In the former, the Self, the Paramātman, is contemplated in his conditioned form (saguṇa) with the idea that 'I am he'. For instance, we read in the TA, VII. 6:

sa ya eṣo 'ntarhṛdaya ākāśaḥ, tasmin ayaṃ puruṣo manomayo 'mṛto hiraṇmayah.

'It is that space within the heart. Here is the Person, formed of thought, undying and golden'.

Here the person (i.e., Paramātman) within the space of the heart with those qualities is to be meditated with the thought that 'I am the Person'.

But where a worldly or external thing which is other than Brahman is contemplated being regarded as a higher god or Brahman himself that contemplation or upāsana is symbolical (pratīkopāsana). For instance, in the case of the text, mano brahmety upāsita (quoted above), the mind is to be contemplated as Brahman. So here is another instance of pratīkopāsana. For details see BS, III. 3 and IV. 1.

Now with regard to our own case, Om is to be meditated as the Self, and so we have also here an instance of pratīkopāsana. The three measures (mātrās) of Om are to be meditated as Viśva, Taijasa and Prājña respectively. And that Om which has no measure (amātra), i.e., the measures of which are not considered separately, and which is thus immeasurable (amātra), or which, in other words, is with unlimited measure (anantamātra) is to be meditated as Turya.

It is said that in an upāsana one thing is to be viewed as another thing; for instance, here the first measure of Om, a, is to be regarded as Viśva. It amounts to saying that these two things are identical. But how can this identity be possible? The answer is this that such identity is by no means actual, but owing to some common quality (sāmānyadharmā) of the two the identity of which is intended. This is a well-known practice among us. We say of a brave lad that he is a lion (siṃho māṇavaḥ), though in fact he is not so. It is only on account of the common quality, bravery, of the lad and a lion that we identify them employing the phrase. Simply following this method of expression our teacher has shown some common qualities of the Puruṣa and Om (I. 19 ff.) owing to which their identity has been made possible. Let us remember here the following line of Yāska in his Nt, VII. 24: bahubhaktivādini brāhmaṇāni bhavanti. It means that the Brāhmaṇas have a great deal of bhaktivāda. But what is bhaktivāda? Durgācārya says in explaining the above line of Yāska: bhaktir nāma guṇakalpanā. tena kenacid guṇena brāhmaṇaṃ sarvaṃ sarvathā varṇayati. tatra tattvam anveṣyam. It says that bhakti means assumption or consideration of a quality by which a Brāhmaṇa describes all things in all kinds of way. But the truth must be investigated there.

I. 20. Evidently the meaning 'subsequence' of the word utkarṣa as given in the translation (p. 10) is far-fetched. The explanation as offered in the Vivarāṇa attributed to Gaṇḍapāda on the NUTU, 2 (see pp. 291 ff.) seems to be better. Besides 'excellence', the word utkarṣa means 'attracting' or 'pulling upwards'. Taking this last sense the Vivarāṇa says that among the three components, a, u and m of Praṇava a is guttural and u is labial. So while a is pronounced from the lower part (throat) of the mouth, u is done from the upper one (lips). Such being the case, in pronunciation u is, as it were, pulled upwards.

Or it may be that u is higher than a, because the former is manifested on the lips filling completely or stepping beyond the throat, and because it is manifested with an effort more than that required for the latter. Let the passage be quoted here as it is in the transcription (p. 25) :

akārād utkarṣa ūrdhvam ākṛṣṭa iva hy ukāra[h] praṇave dṛśyate. taijasaś ca viśvata[h]. svapnādiṣu akārata utkṛṣṭaḥ. uttamo vā ukāraḥ vyāptyatiśayād balātiśayāc ca. akārasthānaṃ kaṇṭhaṃ vyāpya atikram[y?]a oṣṭhasthāne hi tasyābhivyaktiḥ. tenākārādhi-kavyāptimattvenokta ukāraḥ virāja iva hiraṇyagarbhaḥ.
balātiśayatvaṃ ca kharaprayatnavyaṅgyatvāt praṇavasthokārasya mandaprayatnavyaṅgyam akāram apekṣya.

The utkarṣa 'excellence' of Taijasa in this respect in relation to Viśva is this that the former is nearer by one step than the latter to Turiya.

A piece of crystal which is naturally white becomes red in contact with a red flower, yet, it cannot be said that it is red either in its own nature (svabhāva) or in the nature of other (anyabhāva). It is true that under the circumstances it looks red, yet it is actually not so, it only appears to be so, for its innate whiteness does in no way change. See Ś a ṇ k a r a on BS, III. 2. 11 : na hi svacchaḥ san sphaṭiko 'laktakādyu-pādhiyogād asvaccho bhavati, bhramamātratvād abhiniveśasya, upādhiṇāṃ cāvidyāpratyupasthāpitatvāt.

says here that between the two statements in the scripture that which is with a reason is acceptable. Cf. Ś on BS, II. 1. 4 :

On reasoning (tarka) see Ś on BS, II. 1. 11. With regard to yukti we may remember here what is said in YV, II. 18. 2-4 about the two śāstras, ārṣa 'derived from ṛṣis' and pauruṣa 'derived from men'. The author says that a śāstra, though it is a pauruṣa, deserves to be accepted, if it is reasonable. One must follow reason. A speech, if reasonable, must be accepted even from a child, but that which is not reasonable should be rejected like a piece of straw though it might be uttered even by Brahman, the creator. That man is certainly not wise who rejecting the beautiful water of the Ganges flowing before him drinks from a well thinking only that it belongs to his father :

2. The word asparśayoga is found at least once in a Buddhist work. See Bauddha Gāna O Dohā, Sāhityapariṣad Granthāvalī 55, 1323 B.S., p. 19. Here the Sanskrit ṭikā which is not edited critically and full of mistakes reads referring to a yoga asprśayogotvāt for which the Tibetan version (Tanjur, Narthang, Rgyud, Tsi, 175^a. 4) has mi. reg. pahi. sbyor. baḥi. phyir. te clearly suggesting its Sanskrit equivalent asparśayogāt. The only notable difference between the two versions, Sanskrit and Tibetan, is this that while the former has asprśa the suggested reading in the latter is asparśa. But considering the uncritical way in which the edition of the Sanskrit text is prepared and the well-known occurrence of the word sparsa it naturally occurs to one's mind that the reading asprśa for asparśa is a misprint or a mistake of the scribe of the MS used for that edition. Another difference is the use of -tva in the Sanskrit text, which is not to be found in the Tibetan one. According to the former the latter should have been written sbyor. baḥi. ñid. kyi for sbyor. baḥi. But it is often found in Tibetan versions of Sanskrit texts that ñid for -tva- (or eva) is not used even when it is necessary; on the contrary, it is employed when it is not required at all.

4. P. 102, l. 6. For our MS. Me and some read Me and some other.

11. P. 113, l. 5. Read kāraṇa for kaṛaṇa.

12. Note 1. Here 'elsewhere' refers to Variants, p. 237.

20. P. 125, last line. Read cākramakṣaḥ.

23. Note 1. PU actually has jātir in the margin for hyādir in d. Read here edition for editions.
P. 130, l. 31. Read AS for ASh.
24. P. 132, note 3. Add 62 after 61 and omit 79.
28. P. 138, l. 26. Read MuU for MU.
30. Note 1. The couplet is from VM, Simon Hewavitarane Bequest ed. p. 407 with the variant khandhānam ca paṭipāṭi in a as in Bhāratīya Vidyā Series ed., Part I, p. 282.
31. The first half of the kārikā is identical with that of YV, IV. 45. 45.
- 33^a. In such cases (viz., IV. 10, 91-93) one may be inclined to read with some of the MSS (i.e., A¹, A², V) sarvadharmāḥ for sarve dharmāḥ agreeing with Buddhist works.
38. Note 1. In b read pratibuddhavantah as in Gilgit Manuscripts, Vol. II, p. 100.
42. P. 150, note 5. Read MSA for MS.
- 51^c. Read nispandāt for vijñānāt.
58. For the first half see IV, 57^a. For d see LA, pp. 28-49: vicitrā hi yathā māyā dṛśyate na ca vidyate. See our text, p. 151, note 8. Read BA for BC on p. 164, l. 5, and kṛtaḥ for tanmayo on l. 19.
- 60^c. See IV. 99.
71. Note 2. It is a speech of Bhagavat.
- 72^a. See LA, II. 151-152: *vijñānabijaṃ spandate*⁰.
74. P. 177, l. 16. Read nāsti for nāstī.
- 81^c. Read vibhāto for vibhāti.
- P. 188, Note 2. For the meaning of the word parāvṛtti see P. C. Bagchi: Studies in the Tantras, Calcutta University, 1939, pp. 87 ff.

83^{a-b}. Read asti-nāstīti nāstī-nāstīti^c for asti-nāstīti nāstīti nāstīti^c.

84^d. For sarvadṛś cf. sarvajña (I. 12, III. 36) and sarvajñatā (IV. 85. 89).

On this see E. O b e r m i l l e r (The Doctrine of Prajñāpāramitā, etc., p. 44): "When the Bodhisattva has attained the highest of the Unimpeded Paths in the Path of Concentrated Contemplation, he is considered to have terminated his course of training in the path. This last moment of Concentrated trance called the 'thunderbolt-like' (vajropama samādhi) is characterized by the removal of the most subtle forms of defilement and of ignorance. It is simultaneous with the final momentary Illumination (ekakṣaṇa-abhisambodha), and the culmination of the Bodhisattva's intuition of the absolute. All the factors for the attainment of the Omniscience of the Buddha are now brought to accomplishment. Owing to this, the representation of the Absolute appears in its full light; the differentiation to subject and object ceases to exist, the accidental obscurations which had hitherto separated the Germ of the Absolute in the living being now completely vanish, and the Germ now coalesces with the Unique Ultimate Essence which is personified as the Cosmic body (dharmakāya) of the Buddha".¹

“ The special Omniscience which is peculiar only to the Buddha (sarva-ākāra-jñātā) is the knowledge of all the aspects of existence as being devoid of an independent separate reality and as not being liable to origination from the standpoint of the Absolute”. Op. cit., p. 64.
